Minor symptoms of both illnesses can be treated with over-the-counter medications. For more severe problems, see your health-care provider.

Antihistamines can decrease the itching, runny nose and sneezing; antihistamine eye drops can help red, watery eyes; and decongestants can help decrease nasal congestion.

Some over-the-counter antihistamines have been shown to hinder your ability to study and perform well on tests, as well as make your driving less safe.

There are no practical ways to prevent either illness.

MANHATTAN'S TRAIL MIX

Outdoor fitness gurus know of ample opportunities surrounding Little Apple

By JAINA K. STUTHEIT

KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

For those interested in outdoor fitness such as hiking or biking, Manhattan and the surrounding area has much to offer.

Erma Riley, owner of The Pathfinder, said although Kansas doesn't have a lot of public land for hiking trails, the trails available are great.

"Most of the hiking trails are located around state park areas and reservoirs," Riley said.

Riley said the closest and most popular hiking and biking trails are the Linear Park Trails and trails on the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area and at Tuttle Creek State Park, but there are more around the state.

"For anyone interested in bicycle trails and rides, I recommend Steve Martini's book, 'Flint Hills Bicycle Journeys,' she said. "It's a neat little book that features 17 different trails with maps. It tells how long the trips take and includes directions. Most of them are on roads since there aren't many off-road trails around here."

Tuttle Creek has both hiking and bicycle trails that are free to the public.

Paul Weidhaas, park ranger at Tuttle Creek State Park, said the Spillway Cycle Area is probably the most popular place to go mountain biking.

"The area has many different trails people can ride on, and it's open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.," Weidhaas said.

For hiking trails, Weidhaas recommends Carnahan Point Trail, a 9-mile hiking trail.

"The trail starts at Carnahan Park, which is about six miles north of the dam," he said. "The trail winds around the lake through a beautiful tallgrass prairie, some wooded areas, and ravines. It's also a great opportunity to see lots of wildlife."

Weidhaas said the trail is not a loop, so anyone who hikes it has to backtrack or arrange for someone to pick them up at the end.

Weidhaas said there is a nice trail at Fancy Creek, located about 20 miles north of Manhattan near Randolph. That trail is about a mile long.

"These are all nice hiking trails, but people are also free to wander around anywhere and tromp through the woods making their own trails," he said.

The Konza Prairie has three different trails, a self-guided nature trail that is 2.8 miles long, Kings Creek Loop, which is 4.7 miles, and Goodwin Hill Loop, which is 6.1 miles long.

Martini said Manhattan is an excellent area to ride short or long distances.

full brush and driftwood," Paul Weidhaas, Tuttle Creek park ranger, said. "Sturdy boots are an absolute must. I often wear steel-toed boots that give good ankle support. The other thing that people often forget about is taking a first-aid kit."

Most first-aid kits can be bought or made on your own. A camping and hiking first-aid kit checklist can be picked up at The Pathfinder in Manhattan.

"I put all of the first-aid kits together for Lafene Health Center," said Pat Dembkowski, a purchasing employee at Lafene. "The main essentials that need to be in a first-aid kit are several types of bandages, adhesive tape, antiseptic wipes, Neosporin cream, hot and cold presses, sterile pads and medical exam gloves."

When biking outside, clothing and food are important.

"Beside you and the bike, a helmet is the most important for obvious reasons," said Larry Simonson, a bike mechanic at The Pathfinder. "Gloves are also helpful for falls, comfort and protection. Water, food and a small first-aid kit are easily kept in what is called a camelback. I recommend some sort of Powerbar for energy."

Other things to look for when at any lake or outside area are ticks.

"Out at Tuttle Creek we have several crossing Fort Riley Boulevard," he said. "You will pass Griffith Park and go across the railroad tracks. Then you just follow that road all the way around to Rosencutter, where you'll end up across the street from Holiday Inn. Once you get there, you can ride through town, or get on the Linear Trail and head back that way."

Martini said the Hunter's Island route is about a 7-mile ride.

There are many other great rides around the area, ranging from seven to 150 miles, Martini said.

"If someone wants to go on a three-day trip, my book will give them directions and the best places to go," he said.

Tuttle Creek State Park is a second home for many people during the spring and summer, and a traveling medicine cabinet is one thing people should be equipped with for outdoor activities.

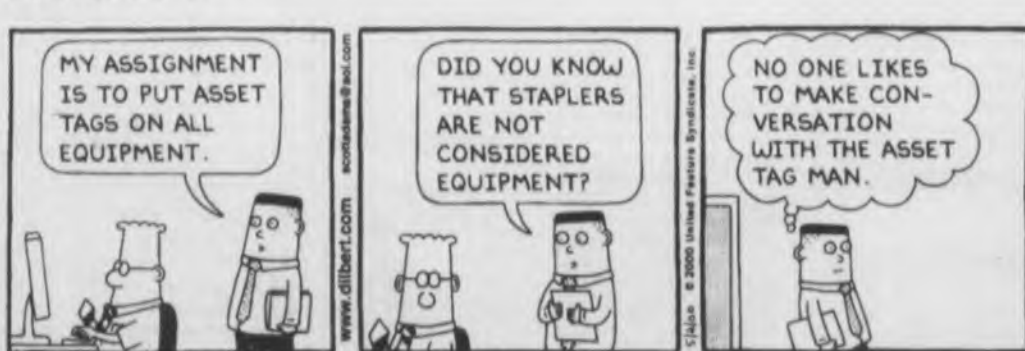

Hiking, biking and camping do not come without the chance for accidents and trouble. To make sure one is fully prepared for a day at the lake, a first-aid kit and proper clothing are essential.

"When hiking or participating in any sort of activity out at Tuttle Creek you will encounter lots of very rocky areas, today that it would be impossible to count and thank them all."

A new home

The completed golf course will benefit a variety of people and will be the new home of the two K-State golf programs. Wefald said it will give K-State a leg up on other collegiate golf programs.

"This golf course is the first golf course to be licensed as a PGA-preferred collegiate golf course," Wefald said. "It just might be that K-State, with the Colbert Hills Golf Course, might very well have the finest collegiate golf course."

Colbert said the project began with wanting to give the programs a worthy home and likened it to the football team's past.

"It started with the golf team," Colbert said. "If Coach Snyder can build a football team, then you ought to be able to build a golf team where you only need five."

In addition to the golf being played on the course, there also will be other services offered. The golf course management program and other research programs will use the course.

Colbert Hills is a PGA Tour preferred course, and the PGA will keep an eye on the course's development as needed. It will be an opportunity for PGA officials to keep in contact with the facility.

The teaching aspect

Officials said the course will give children the opportunity to learn the game.

A 1964 graduate of K-State, Colbert talked about the contacts he made through golf while working at the Manhattan Country Club.

Now Colbert, in conjunction with the course, is working to get today's youth involved in the game. The First Tee program will give interested children an opportunity to learn the game at the Tiger Woods Golf Academy at K-State. Colbert said the program is necessary not only to keep the game of golf strong but also strengthen society.

"I think you have to teach these children to be on campus and get them to go to college and go to school," Colbert said. "We're not just trying to build a golf course — we also want to teach kids about life through golf."

Each of the holes on the nine-hole beginning course has a core value assigned to it. Colbert said he hopes the concept spreads to other universities nationwide. With K-State's First Tee program, Colbert said he wants to include about 1,000 kids and to expand the program nationwide to 50 other universities.

Lee Trevino, one of the golf professionals at Monday's opening, said it is important to bring golf into the lives of children. He spoke specifically about professional golfer Tiger Woods.

"A lot has been made about how much Tiger Woods' father pushed him into golf," he said. "He never pushed this young man. He made it available to him, and by making it available this young man could not get enough of it and began to love it."

"He got better and better and better," Trevino said.

Trevino also said he has become involved in the First Tee program as opposed to other programs because he didn't feel like they catered to all children.

"Junior clinics when I was a kid were for rich kids. If your mother and your father could take you, then the pros could teach you," Trevino said. "But what do you do with the inner-city kids? Do you bring them in a bus, give them a clinic and put them back on the bus for another year?"

Now he said he believes the new program will help to bring the game to children interested in the game.

"Any child from age 8 to 18 who wants to play can come out here and have golf professionals who teach him," Trevino said.

Colbert Hills opens for public play on Sunday, but selected groups will have the opportunity to play throughout the week.

COLBERT

John Jacobs, who won the Bruno's Memorial Classic tournament Sunday in Alabama, also was in attendance. Former Kansas City Chief kicker Jan Stenerud and K-State alumni Kevin Lockett and Lynn Dickey also came to the grand opening.

After the ceremonies to open the course, which included the traditional ribbon-cutting by Colbert at the first tee, the professionals went to the practice range to warm up for the event.

Trevino entertained the crowd gathered at the practice range.

"Maybe I ought to play the entire round with my 5-wood," the former caddy from El Paso, Texas, said after duffing an iron.

Sorenstam said she was there, like all the other professionals, at the request of Colbert.

"Jim asked me to be a part of this, and I said I would," Sorenstam said. "We've been good friends, and he's always been helpful to me, so when he asked, I said I'd help him."

Standing on the practice tee, it was clear the weather would dampen and cool some of the enthusiasm, much like it would the tournament itself.

With wind howling throughout the course at around 20 miles per hour, temperatures in the 50s and a mist blowing through the air, conditions were more suited for a British Open at Muirfield than in the middle of Kansas, participants said.

At noon, golf carts carrying the players were dispatched all around the course for a shotgun start, in which all tees were used as starting points, rather than just the first or 10th tees.

The par-72, 7,525-yard course played even longer Monday because of the rains it received the day before. Colbert said there were seven different sets of tee markers, enough to allow various levels of challenge to all levels of players.

The players at the tournament ranged from professional to occasional duffer, but one player stood out because of his age and relative ability.

Jimmy Dietz, junior at Blue Valley Northwest High School and grandson of Jim Colbert, started his round at the 13th, a short par-4.

"I love this course," Dietz said. "I played this course over the weekend, and it is playing a lot longer today, obviously because of the rain."

On the 13th, he knocked a pitching wedge from 90 yards to within 25 feet of the cup.

On the 14th hole, Dietz drove short of the creek that cuts across the fairway, then hit an iron into the rough on the left edge of the green.

His chip just grazed the right edge of the cup, giving an easy par putt. The drive on 15 hugged the right side of the fairway, then his approach ended up pin-high about 20 feet left of the cup.

Rain threatened to shorten the event to nine holes. At the end of nine holes, Colbert's team had birdied six holes for a combined team score of 30 on the front side.

Dan Lykins, a 1977 K-State graduate, listens to new basketball head coach Jim Wooldridge during the UPC sponsored "Meet the Coach" in the K-State Student Union Monday afternoon. Lykins asked a few questions of the new coach concerning how he planned to renew fans' interest in the team.

JUSTIN HAYWORTH/COLLEGIAN

programs, and I've been able to turn some teams around. I think people recognize that."

Moreover, Wooldridge said he'll keep his end of the bargain in getting the team prepared for next season.

"People in the Midwest believe in hard work ethic," he said, "and I guarantee you'll get that from me."

As far as future public-relation efforts for Wooldridge, he said he'll be energetic heading into the summer and fall months.

"I've got a calendar full of speech engagements," Wooldridge said. "I've been to Kansas City and sat down with two television stations, a radio station and The Kansas City Star, and I will continue to reach out to as many people as we can. We're very approachable."

That personable nature bodes well for a new coach trying to get situated in a new program.

"We try to promote teamwork with all the entities involved with K-State basketball," Wooldridge said. "Now, we can't do all that in one night, but we're going to continue to reach out to the community as much as we can."

purpose of Senior Send-Off is not only to expose seniors to the benefits an association membership can offer, but also to give them a chance to relax and have a good time before finals week.

"We want to allow graduating seniors a good time on their last day of classes to celebrate their graduation," White said. "We also want to tell them about what the association can offer and start a connection with them now."

White said the event was created because the association was looking at other ways to help recent alumni stay active with the university.

He said it also gives the association a chance to give back to the students.

"We are always looking at other ways to get more involved with the students on campus," White said. "This is also an opportunity for us to do something nice for the seniors."

Frieling said graduating seniors who attend the event will receive information about Alumni Clubs in their area and ways to continue to stay involved in K-State and other related activities.

"In their grab bags, students will be given a list of Alumni Clubs," Frieling said. "It is always nice to have a K-State contact wherever you live and establish a connection with fellow K-State alumni."

Both White and Frieling said the Senior Send-Off has been successful in the past, with more than 600 people attending last year.

White said the goal for the 2000 event is 1,000 students, but she said each year, the event continues to grow.

"In the past, this event has been very successful," White said. "Each year, we have been pleased with the turnout and it has slowly gotten bigger. Our only hope with each year is that it continues to grow. With that many people in one area at one event, people are going to have a good time."

In the event of rain, the event still will take place, but will be moved inside the Brandberry Indoor Complex, next to Bramlage.

Regulators take steps to halt claims from 14 online firms or individuals

By MARCY GORDON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Fourteen online trading firms or individuals have agreed to stop making claims that the trading strategies and systems they sell can bring investors easy money with little risk, federal regulators said Monday.

The Federal Trade Commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission announced settlements with the firms in which they agreed to drop unsubstantiated claims of profits.

The federal agencies also warned consumers to be wary of false and misleading claims on Internet sites touting trading strategies or systems.

"The Internet provides many benefits to the investing public, but it can also provide a means for some Web operators to make misleading or fraudulent claims about their investment strategies," said William Rainer, chairman of the commodities oversight agency. "Today's actions ... should help remind consumers to be very skeptical when someone promises amazing investment profits with little or no risk."

The firms and individuals neither admitted to nor denied wrongdoing in the settlements with the three agencies.

Eleven, cited by the CFTC for alleged fraudulent promotion of computerized trading systems and advisory services for commodities such as foreign currencies, also agreed to pay civil fines of $10,000 each. The fines will be waived, however, for those that can demonstrate they are unable to pay.

The three firms named by the FTC provide strategies for day trading, in which investors make bets on the tiniest changes in stock prices, squeezing profits by rapidly buying and selling shares electronically.

The online firms — CompuTrade LLC, Granite Investments and Day Trading International of Kirksville, Mo. — sold combinations of "real time" training, computer software programs, trading manuals, e-mail newsletters and mentoring services at prices from $79 to $4,995, the FTC said.

They made advertising claims such as "Make money regardless of the market going up or down" and investment returns of "2,041 percent," the agency said.

Under the settlements with the FTC, which have been approved by the agency's commissioners but require 30 days of public comment before final adoption, the three firms would have to include this sentence in all future advertising: "DAY TRADING involves high risks and YOU can LOSE a lot of money."

Protesters clash with police, storm McDonald's in London

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Anti-capitalist protesters clashed with police Monday in central London, tearing down the golden arches of a McDonald's and spray-painting a hammer and sickle on a statue of Winston Churchill in a May Day protest.

Elsewhere in Europe, the workers who are usually commemorated on May Day took a back seat to the far right, as neo-Nazis rallied in German cities and nationalist parties held demonstrations in France.

The riots erupted in London when a group broke away from a peaceful demonstration held by protesters planting seeds in front of the Houses of Parliament.

Demonstrators threw stones and other objects near Prime Minister Tony Blair's official residence at Downing Street, where a dozen officers in riot gear took up positions. The protesters then stormed a nearby branch of McDonald's, breaking windows, tearing down the large "M" sign and distributing food.

The demonstrators tried unsuccessfully to storm St. Martin's in the Field Church, daubed anti-war slogans on the Cenotaph war memorial and defaced a statue of Churchill by putting red paint on his mouth to look like blood and spraying the communist symbol on his jacket.

They also covered the lower part of Nelson's Column, the slender white tower that anchors Trafalgar Square, with anarchy symbols and scrawled "Reclaim the Streets 2000" across it.

As darkness began to fall, about 2,000 protesters corralled in the square were allowed to leave, resulting in more violence. They smashed car windows and severely damaged several businesses before being pushed across the Waterloo Bridge to the south bank of the Thames, where authorities once again penned them.

"The people responsible for the damage caused in London today are an absolute disgrace," Blair said.

"To deface the Cenotaph and the statue of Winston Churchill is simply beneath contempt," he said. "It is only because of the bravery and courage of our war dead that these idiots can live in a free country at all."

Three police officers and four civilians were taken to the hospital and nine other policemen suffered minor injuries. Twenty-eight people were arrested.

In Berlin, about 1,200 neo-Nazis rallied in a depressed eastern neighborhood. The young crowd, many with shaved heads, waved German imperial flags and listened to speeches calling for "Germany for Germans." There were no outbreaks of violence, as police kept a group of more than 100 counter-demonstrators separated. More than 100 people from both right- and left-wing groups were detained.

About 1,800 more neo-Nazis had rallies in other cities around Germany.

In Hamburg, Germany, several hundred rioters threw stones, broke windows and set bonfires early Monday, until the melee was broken up by police using water cannons. Twenty-one police officers were injured and 134 people arrested.

Police used a water cannon against a Monday night march of about 5,000 leftists through Berlin's Kreuzberg district after demonstrators lit a barricade on fire and threw stones, bottles and fireworks. Several dozen people were arrested.

In France, about 3,000 members of the far-right National Front party marched to the Paris Opera House behind a woman on horseback dressed as Joan of Arc, whom the anti-immigration party has adopted as its patron saint.

Progress remains slow in Mideast talks

By DANA BUDEIRI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EILAT, Israel — Trying to improve the climate in peace talks after a bungled start, Israeli officials said Monday they've resigned themselves to Palestinian statehood, and the Palestinians acknowledged Israel's pain on the eve of Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Despite such goodwill gestures, negotiators reported little progress and awaited the arrival of a U.S. mediator Tuesday to help draft an outline of a final peace treaty.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat said he would declare statehood sometime after Sept. 13, the deadline for the treaty itself, regardless of whether he had reached agreement with Israel by then on the terms of independence.

"The independent Palestinian state is the natural right of the Palestinian people," Arafat told reporters at his Gaza City headquarters.

Israeli officials said they would not oppose a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip but said the Palestinians should accept that some Jewish settlements there will become part of Israel.

A second day of negotiations in this Red Sea resort took place amid Palestinian anger over Sunday's disclosure that Israel has authorized construction of 174 new homes in Maale Adumim, the largest Jewish settlement in the West Bank. U.S. envoy Dennis Ross was to join the talks as a mediator Tuesday for the first time.

Arafat said the ongoing construction had a "negative effect" on the Eilat talks.

Israeli Cabinet Minister Haim Ramon, who often speaks for Prime Minister Ehud Barak, said the Palestinians knew well that Israel planned to annex Maale Adumim as part of a peace treaty.

"The same as the Palestinians say it is clear to them that they will have a Palestinian state," Ramon said. "It's clear to them as well that we will insist that Maale Adumim will become part of the state of Israel."

Commission approves strip mall progress

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Enna Shipp had one piece of advice for her neighbors as she walked away from the podium at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night: plant lots of trees for a higher appraisal value.

The Manhattan City Commission voted 4-0, with Commissioner Roger Reitz absent, to establish a strip mall in the area of North Third Street between Leavenworth Street and Bluemont Avenue.

The decision furthers the possibility of replacing the 34- to 35-acre area with a shopping center proposed by Chicago-based developers First National Development Ltd. According to current city estimates, the area includes an estimated 30 residential owners and 24 commercial owners. One concern in particular for area owners would be how they would be compensated if the deal progressed.

"What I want to know is if we're going to get what we put into it, what we owe on it and what we need for our emotional needs," Shipp said about her home on Moro Street.

Connie Bleuel said she and many others have put their lives on hold, not knowing what will happen next. Right now, Bleuel said she and her husband could pay off their house in the next three years.

"Where in Manhattan can we go to have what we have now without going into further debt?" she said. "I guess the biggest thing about this is bringing in the element of fear and the unknown."

Debbie Nuss, president of the League of Women Voters in Manhattan/Riley County, said the league and the city shared the goal to strengthen the downtown region of the city, but that the league could not support the redevelopment vote because the city has yet to provide for the houses displaced.

"It is not enough to have a relocation plan unless we know where the residences will relocate to," she said.

More housing is needed in the area as it is, she said, and the city would do well to try to plan housing into a shopping center for the area.

Attorney Joe Knopp, representing area businesses and individuals, said he objected to the redevelopment because the funding might require Manhattan sales tax funds. Areas such as Village Plaza and Miller Ranch could provide space without costing citizens, he said.

"There's a million square feet lying out there for development at zero cost to this community," he said.

Derrick Roberson, an attorney representing Pizza Hut's interests in the area, said the piecemeal approach to the project keeps it moving but delays all important questions to the end.

Tuesday's decision marks the third the commission has made since January to keep the project moving.

"It builds a momentum of its own, and I don't think it is sound decision making," Roberson said.

Commissioners said the step-by-step approach allows the city more chances to back out without cost, plus a chance to get specific plans for how the developer would relocate the existing persons.

"I think we're going to have to proceed to get answers," Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

A presentation by Joe Norton, attorney for the city's bond council, said the proposal still could be vetoed by the Board of Education or the Riley County Commission, and all parties would have to approve the developer's feasibility study, project plan and relocation plan before the agreement was binding.

The entire process could take another three to six months, he said.

Typing of TEVALs optional

■ Handwritten comments might be available for teachers to see.

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When it comes to evaluating K-State faculty, the university has several guidelines.

The university requires that every faculty member involved with teaching responsibilities be student-evaluated at least once a year. Tenured faculty must use either the TEVAL or IDEA form to evaluate one course of their choice once a year. All faculty members who are not tenured are required to be evaluated once a year in every course they teach.

The evaluations then are sealed and taken to the Center for Advancement of Teaching and Learning in Fairchild Hall, unless they are intercepted by their department, said Victoria Clegg, director of Center for Advancement of Teaching and Learning. If intercepted, the department can type students' responses. They then must send them to Fairchild for tabulation of results.

While the university does have several guidelines regarding evaluations, it does not state comments must be typed before teachers see them.

Clegg said students who are concerned about comments they make on the form should know several things.

"These are not returned to professors until grades are submitted," she said. "So, if a student is concerned about a comment they have made, it won't be seen until after grades are determined."

"She also said unless a student has distinct handwriting or is in a smaller class, chances are, the professor will not be able to identify them. If

Celebrity golf tourney to be at Colbert Hills

By MIKE SHEPHERD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Colbert Hills will play host to its first celebrity golf tournament less than a month after its grand opening.

Members of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity are teaming up with former K-State football All-American and Kansas City Chief Kevin Lockett to bring athletes to Manhattan on May 19-20.

Proceeds from the event will go to local charities, including the Manhattan Special Olympics Sports Club, Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan and the Read and Achieve Programs in Manhattan, the Kansas City area and Tulsa, Okla.

"We have set a goal of $25,000," said Tim Blake, vice president of Lambda Chi Alpha. "I think that's attainable."

For Jim Colley, treasurer of the Manhattan Special Olympics team, that's a share of money his organization would not otherwise have.

"That's crucial for us because we only have a $10,000 budget," he said. "It's not a great budget but a lot to us."

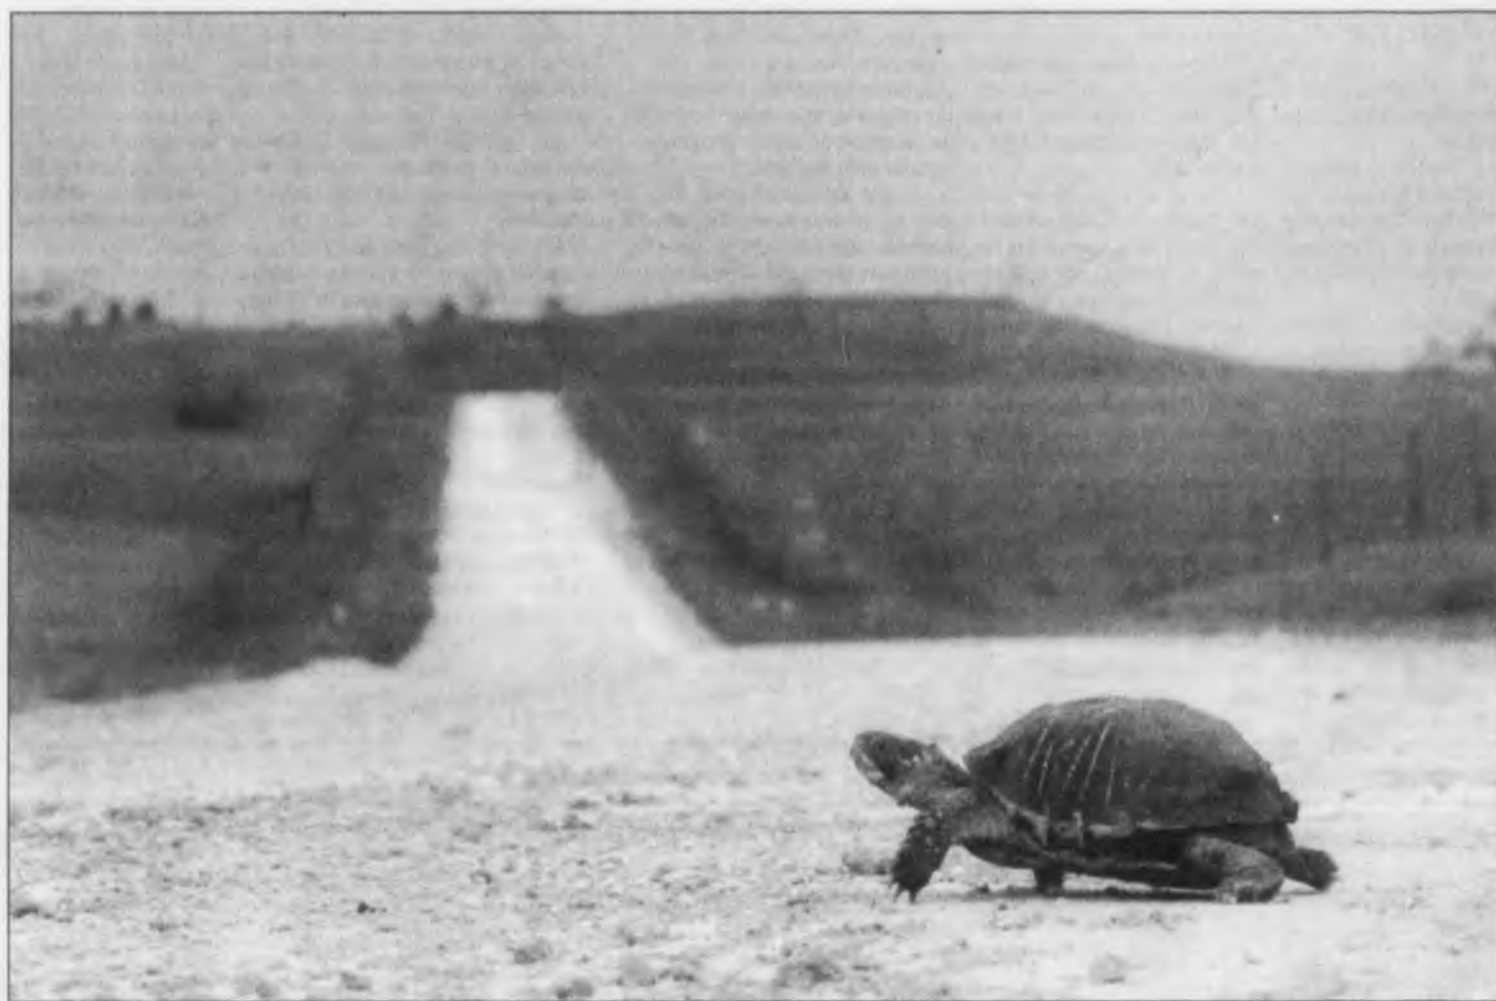

Colley said the share of money received from last year's celebrity basketball game by the same sponsors made up a third of this year's budget.

It was money they were not expecting, he said.

What it allowed them to do was expand their services — adding three new sports to their line-up. Just last month, Special Olympians competed in cycling, power lifting and swimming.

More than 800 residents of eastern Kansas could directly benefit from the upcoming eight-mile Multiple Sclerosis Walk at 8 a.m. Saturday.

MS Walk is a nationwide event that raises money to conduct research and set up educational and support programs for individuals living with multiple sclerosis, a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system.

The Manhattan MS Walk began in 1991 with the help of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

"This event was originally coordinated by a girl in our house whose mother had MS," said Tiffany Grams, Manhattan community chairwoman and junior in bakery science and management. "We continued supporting the walk not only for Alpha Delta Pi, but to benefit the Manhattan community, too."

There were 11 MS Walk sites last year in Kansas. Together, these sites raised $90,000.

Manhattan's contribution to this figure was $5,417. The Eastern Kansas Branch of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society has set this year's goal higher.

"Our total goal for our area is $100,000, and we are hoping to see Manhattan raise $15,000 of that total," said Sheri Daudet, branch manager of the Eastern Kansas Branch for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Daudet said Manhattan's numbers have varied from year to year. She said nice weather probably was the cause of last year's low turnout.

They already are expecting an increase in participants this year, due to the number of individuals who are preregistered for this event, she said.

Individuals wishing to participate in the eight-mile walk, which provides a handicapped-accessible option, can register by phone, mail and at the multiple sclerosis Web site, www.nmss.org. There is no entry fee, but participants are asked to gather pledges to raise money for the event.

"We do recommend gathering at least $25 minimum in pledges, but this isn't set in stone," Daudet said. "There will be prizes available to individuals raising certain amounts of money. All of the prizes have been donated by sponsors and range from T-shirts, ball caps to Eddie Bauer gift certificates."

There also is a Mission Impossible Award given to individuals raising $5,000 or more, which is recognized at the national level, Daudet said.

Money raised from this event is used to provide a variety of services to individuals with MS.

"Sixty percent of the money raised will stay in eastern Kansas to provide support and programs," Daudet said. "The other 40 percent goes to nationals, where it is used for research development."

The number of people who will be diagnosed with MS can be estimated, but the physical and emotional effects are unpredictable.

"The total incidence rate of individuals who will have MS is 100 in every 100,000 people. Most of those people are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40, and the progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted," Daudet said.

New advances in research and treatment are an incentive for individuals to Cool Care Club offers elementary students after-school entertainment

By BEN HOPPER

Erin Bremer's education doesn't end after school.

She and other Manhattan elementary school-aged children attend the Cool Care Club.

"I really like the animals and the people that go there," said Erin, a fourth grade Bluemont Elementary School student.

The Cool Care Club, a licensed day-care facility, has about 25 pets that students can feed and care for. It is operated by Chris Payne, a Manhattan School District teacher, weekday afternoons. Payne, a 1994 graduate of K-State, started the club in 1996.

"The pets are a big part of the club. It gives the kids an opportunity to get involved," Payne said.

A chinchilla, gecko, sugar-gliders and tarantula are just a few of the animals that students care for. They also have the opportunity to clean cages and feed the animals.

"They are learning life skills," Payne said. "By doing the job, they get a respect for nature and life."

For doing these jobs, children are paid "bogus bucks," the club's currency.

Students earn and manage their own bogus bucks. The bogus bucks are used to purchase items such as crayons, stuffed animals and stickers from the club's store.

Most of the items are donated.

"Hot Wheels are a big item now," Payne said.

Erin has been a club member for more than two years. Her father, Dale, said he likes how well the kids play together and the atmosphere at the club.

"Erin likes the animals," he said. "There is also a computer with educational software and games."

Dale Bremer, a research associate in the agronomy department, said he thinks having the children do jobs and earn bogus bucks is a great idea.

"It teaches them about working and getting something from their work," he said.

Payne said parents have to enroll their children into the club.

"It is contracted care — parents pay for their

Survey finds Hispanic/black parents to value education

Hispanic and black parents are far more likely than white parents to rank a college education as the most important ingredient for a youngster's success, according to a poll released today.

The survey of the general public and parents of high-school-age youths found that 65 percent of Hispanic parents and 47 percent of black parents considered college the most important element for success.

Only 35 percent of the general public and 33 percent of white parents agreed.

Most of the general public and non-minority parents picked various other attributes — such as knowing how to get along with people, having a good work ethic, gaining skills on the job — as most crucial for success.

The survey was conducted by the New York-based Public Agenda, a non-profit research group.

Parents of high-school-age youngsters also endorsed more education as the best sequel to high school graduation. More than three-quarters, or 77 percent, identified four- or two-year college as most beneficial, and 16 percent cited trade school. Only 4 percent advocated a job.

Yet 67 percent of the public and 63 percent of parents with high school kids said they believe success is possible without college.

The survey's findings on minority aspirations contrasts sharply with minority attendance in schools of higher education.

In 1998, the latest federal figures available, among 18- to 24-year-olds, 37 percent of whites were enrolled in higher education, but only 30 percent of blacks and 20 percent of Hispanics were.

"For many non-Hispanic whites, it is a given that they will go to college," said Antonio Flores, president of the Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities.

But not so for Hispanics. "They want to go, but they can't afford it," Flores said. They may be held back by poverty, language barriers or lack of family experience in higher education.

The survey polled 1,015 adults by telephone in December. An additional 451 Hispanics, blacks and whites were included in the sample of parents of high school-age children. The margin of sampling error was 3 percent overall, and 7 percent for the extra survey of parents.

The study was commissioned by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education in San Jose, Calif., which promotes education and training after high school.

Speaker addresses need for juvenile crime prevention

TOPEKA — Kansas needs to focus on programs designed to prevent violence and other problems among juveniles rather than locking them up, Dr. W. Walter Menninger said Tuesday.

"Instead of building more and more facilities to warehouse kids, we have to band together for effective programs of prevention," said Menninger, president and chief executive officer of The Menninger Clinic in Topeka.

Menninger, a nationally known children's advocate, made his remarks at the First Annual Governor's Conference on Juvenile Justice.

He said juvenile lockups "have limited positive returns."

Menninger bemoaned the legislature's recent decision to spend about $60 million to build juvenile lock-ups and only $5 million for prevention programs.

"Until we increase our investment in prevention and improve the ratio of just $1 for prevention for every $12 spent for institutions, we're not going to solve our problems," Menninger said.

Menninger said his psychiatric clinic has started a project with 10 Topeka schools to identify troublemakers and show parents, teachers and students how to prevent violence.

At the first school to implement the Menninger Peaceful Schools Project, suspensions have decreased dramatically and students have a better learning environment, Menninger said.

The key, he said, is to detect problems as soon as possible and help children and their parents.

"Our society, as a whole, doesn't pay enough attention to children early on,"

he said.

Menninger said the loss of hope among youths is a primary contributor to violence. The problem is worsened by easy access to weapons, he said.

Colorado politics. The plan to sell the Colorado's $2.9 billion share of the tobacco settlement still was alive Monday despite a legislative committee's rejection of the proposal.

The Senate Finance Committee voted against House Bill 1454, but late Monday night, through a procedural move, revived the legislation for another vote.

The measure would sell part of the proceeds to investors to guarantee funding, but some lawmakers said there is no evidence the tobacco industry is in danger of going bankrupt.

Senate Minority Leader Mike Feeley, D-Lakewood, supported the bill, agreeing with state Treasurer Mike Coffman that it made better sense to let investors take the risk and ensure that programs to be funded with the money will continue, no matter what happens to the tobacco industry.

Coffman said the state's initial payment is lower than expected because of declining tobacco sales.

The Legislature has passed Senate Bill 71, outlining how the state will spend its $2.9 billion share of the national tobacco settlement.

The money would be used for health insurance for low-income children, improving literacy, scientific research on tobacco-related issues and fund tobacco education, prevention and cessation programs.

Colorado was among 39 states that sued the tobacco industry to recoup public expenses on smoking-related illnesses. In 1998, the states and the industry agreed on the $206 billion settlement, which protected the industry from further litigation by the states.

Colorado's share is estimated at $2.9 billion, to be paid in installments through 2025.

So far, eight other states have rejected selling their settlements to investors on grounds that it did not make financial sense.

Sen. Doug Lamborn, R-Colorado Springs, said the Legislature is making a mistake by not setting aside more money in the trust fund in case smoking continues to decline.

Under anticipated plans for selling, or securitizing, the settlement, the state would have received about $940 million immediately.

Sen. Ed Perlmutter, D-Golden, said the state should demand a higher price of at least $1.2 billion, but the Finance Committee rejected the proposal.

Sen. Doug Linkhart, D-Denver, said the tobacco industry will continue to soar, even if Colorado succeeds in cutting back on tobacco use as it hopes.

FLAT OUT OF LUCK

Brandon Jessop, sophomore in secondary education, waits for his ride at the Halfway Station along U.S. Highway 24 in Pottawatomie County on Tuesday afternoon after getting a flat tire on his bicycle. He said he was dared to ride 100 miles, "so I might as well go all the way to Topeka and back," he said. "One hundred miles is all the same if I can run 28," the former K-State track team member said, "unless you get a flat tire and have to wait for your ride for an hour and a half." Jessop waited 75 minutes for his roommate to pick him up.

Graduates can access e-mail for 6 months

By DANEDRI THOMPSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students not returning to K-State or graduating still will have access to their e-mail accounts until Sept. 18. After that, they still can have K-State in their address with free e-mail from zk-state.com.

Larry Robertson, university consulting manager at the technical assistance center, said students not returning will lose their ksu.edu accounts on that date because it's the 20th day of the next academic semester.

"The 20th day is the day the university has said that all students who will return to K-State are on campus and using the system," he said.

Accounts belonging to students who don't return in the fall will be disabled. Robertson said user identifications will last about 12 months, though.

"So, if a student doesn't come back in the fall, but then comes in December, they can come back and use the same user ID," he said.

He said students can make their accounts last a little longer by forwarding mail from their accounts to another account.

"If a person forwards their account, let's say to a Hotmail or another account, that forward lasts for six months past the 20th academic day," he said. "That way they can still receive mail for up to six months, so you'd have enough time for everyone to learn you're new address."

He said students can forward their e-mail from their Unix account to another one by logging onto Unix and typing the word "forward." He said the system then will lead students through the forwarding process.

Karen Shafer, director of alumni communications for the KSU Alumni Association, said just because students are leaving the university, they don't have to go without an e-mail account with K-State in the address.

She said the Alumni Association launched a Web site where students can get free e-mail, which will be their user name followed by the domain zk-state.com.

"I think it's just a way for people to show their pride, because you can e-mail all your friends and have K-State in the address," she said.

Travis Lenkner, campus representative for zuniversity.com, said zk-state is a portal site for the university.

"It's much like Yahoo! or Excite, except it's about K-State."

Through that portal site, you can register and use free e-mail," he said.

He said the portal site was acquired through a partnership between the Alumni Association and zuniversity.com. Zk-state also will provide Internet service to alumni.

"You graduate and you're moving," Lenkner said. "One of the first things you're trying to figure out is how to get Internet access."

He said that's where zk-state comes in. For $16.95 a month, K-State alumni get unlimited Internet access, as well as the free e-mail account.

Seniors can pick up the software for zk-state Internet access at Senior Send-off on Friday, or they can stop by the Alumni Association and pick up the software.

Lenkner said the idea behind the project is to keep alumni connected to the university.

He said the Alumni Association has found it loses track of a lot of alumni for 10 years, and then they join the association.

"This group that graduates right now is the hardest to keep track of because they're switching jobs and moving around," he said. "The Internet is much more popular among the younger generation, and we're hoping to provide a way for a large majority of our alumni that's one less hassle when you move. Plus, it keeps you connected to K-State, effort-free."

He said another advantage of zk-state is that money generated from the project returns to K-State organizations.

"The whole idea behind zk-state is for every person who uses it, proceeds come back to the university," he said. "The university Foundation, Alumni Association and other portions of the university get some of that money."

10 Commandments monolith construction delayed

■ Increase in budget to pay for construction of wall bearing monolith.

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The construction of the Ten Commandments monolith's new home in the Heritage Court at Manhattan Christian College has been delayed slightly due to weather but is scheduled to be complete in early August.

Jolene Rupe, director of public relations for MCC, said the exact date of the completion of the project is unknown.

"It's going great, but a lot of it depends on the weather," she said. "Right now it's a mudbog over there because of all the rain. There are several steps on this project and as far as I know we are still on step one."

Charles Hall, project manager for Heritage Court, began the project's groundbreaking Feb. 4, and said the project was scheduled to take two months.

"The weather held us up to start with," he said. "And we had to get everything coordinated with all of the volunteers at the beginning of construction. That's the main thing that slowed us down."

Hall said the first step to the construction was to begin building the masonry walls, which are not complete yet. The placement of the four flag poles, completion of underground irrigation and wiring, the construction of five walkways and landscaping would follow.

"It's going very nicely once we got the masonry work going," he said. "We've been working every day with exception to rain. It's very smooth right now."

The monolith, which the City Commission voted to remove from City Hall a year ago, will be surrounded by a brick walkway, benches, planters, four flagpoles and stone gates as a new entryway onto the campus, Rupe said.

The project originally was estimated to cost $50,000, but $12,000 had to be added to the cost to pay for stonemasons to construct the Heritage Court's walls.

"We assumed that some local stonemasons would volunteer their time to do the stone work, but they had to back out because of other time commitments," said Lori Jo Stanfield, vice president for business affairs at MCC. "So we were forced to increase the budget to $62,000 to pay for the stone work." Rupe said the monolith will be one of the final additions to the court and will face Anderson Avenue.

MCC made an agreement last spring to present the monolith at the Heritage Court with the monolith's owners, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Aerie and Auxiliary No. 2468 shortly after the City Commission voted to remove it.

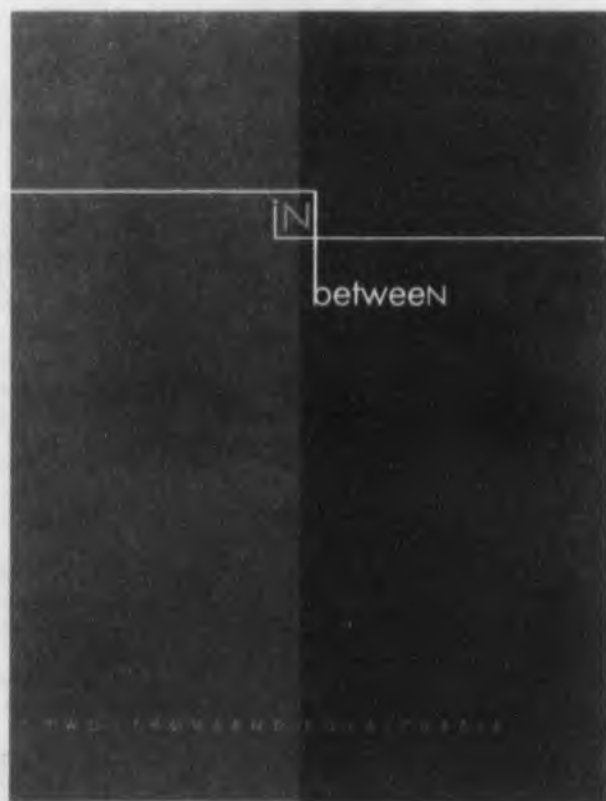

MCC will not own the monolith but agreed to insure it against damage and is allowed to display it as long as it remains in Manhattan.

Rupe said students and faculty of MCC are excited that the Ten Commandments monolith will have a new home.

"Everyone's been very positive about the construction and they're glad to see that the project is under way," she said. "There has been a lot of feedback that the commandments finally have a home."

TEVALS ineffective method of critiquing instructors

The teacher-evaluation process at K-State needs to be either scrapped or reformed.

Student evaluation of teachers is disorganized, has little value to teachers and threatens students' academic futures. In its present form, it is virtually worthless.

To begin with, the entire process is a disorganized mess.

Students are not aware of how the forms are used; neither are some instructors.

Some teachers ask students to answer additional questions. Most don't.

Many students believe written comments must be typed before they are given to instructors. They are misinformed.

Secondly, TEVALS are of little consequence to most instructors.

Many students will fill out the form with zest, wanting desperately for their voice finally to be heard.

Many of the forms, however, simply are ignored.

Some teachers with tenure will tell their classes the insignificance of the forms. Others will let students fill them out, believing they will someday be used. Others do look at them and gain valuable feedback.

In addition, the fact that TEVALS do not have to be typed prior to being given to teachers is appalling. Students who give frank, harsh evaluations could be penalized later if they have the same instructors.

Granted, the likelihood of a vengeful instructor taking out his or her anger on a student's grade is slim.

Yet that chance exists, and precautions should be taken to prevent its occurrence.

TEVALS need to be revised now or simply abolished. In their present form, they have the potential to harm students, something they absolutely should not do.

Before they are used again, several changes need to be made. Students and faculty should be given a uniform policy on how the evaluations will be used. In addition, that policy needs to be one in which the students' voices are not only heard, but heeded.

Finally, all TEVALS should be typed before they are ever viewed by an instructor. Student feedback will not be unrestrained until students can be assured they will not receive backlash for speaking out.

Until that time, the voice of students will continue to be needlessly ignored.

mental JOURNEY

Uncertain future leaves columnist thinking of infinite possibilities

I met a young woman the other day who looked, walked and sounded exactly like my first love.

That's not "a resemblance" — exactly like her. I saw her several times that day, and every time I did, I slipped out of fin-de-siècle Manhattan and fell several years and thousands of miles away, back into the cavernous recesses of my personal history. I was immersed in the sights, sounds, scents and textures of the life I led before I came here. I couldn't leave — and I didn't want to.

I've always been sort of nostalgic at best, outright melancholy at worst. I pick the scabs of my past nervously. I constantly revisit old, lost friends and mentally trace my steps from here back to the landmarks of my greener years.

This probably isn't healthy. Assuming it's not just senility (or simple insanity), why does the past, merely a handful of dust and other people's fingerprints on my life, have such a pull? I'm supposed to be a rational, forward-thinking kinda guy (according to the Collegian media guide and collectible card game). Then why am I stuck knee-deep in who I used to be?

Maybe it's all relative. Why can we remember the past but not the future? Well, avoiding the "why" question (Stephen Hawking hasn't returned a single call of mine since the Avalanche beat the Coyotes — sheesh), just the simple fact that we do tells us as much as we need to know.

The future is amorphous, uncertain, variable and untrustworthy. I've never gotten used to the idea of even having a future. I've always assumed that final torch-bearing mob is waiting just around the corner and that I'd end up trapped in a balala-wood windmill faster than you can say "Boris Karloff."

The past, though — rock-solid, dependable, and inevitably as glorious and pleasant as you remember it to be. Cozier than a warm couch during first frost and NFL wild-cards, isn't it?

Funny thing is, most of my memories are pretty explicitly wretched. Do I remember the three years we spent together? Nope.

I remember clearly every snide comment, every awkward silence, the last 15 minutes together — a long, excruciating goodbye pulled taut until it broke and we tumbled down into our own separate worlds. I remember getting the car stuck in the snow, trudging three miles in a blizzard and collapsing through the door to the first question, "Where's the car?" I remember the time she broke my nose (hey, it was an accident, and I was asking for it, besides). I remember knowing with a coroner's certainty that it was over — losing the best thing I ever had — and damning myself for it.

But I can't remember the nights of hot apple cider and pulled blinds and awkward half-smiles by two people used to scowling ... I can't recall these at all until someone pulls them out of the little-used recesses of my ever-porous brain, out from between the episodes of "Probe" and the special character codes for a Commodore 64 embedded in my gray matter, and thrusts them so far into the front of my mind that they're in my eyes, obscuring my sight.

There's a perfectly reasonable young woman talking to me, someone I can't even detect because of the ghosts in my head. If she hadn't been wearing a name tag, I still wouldn't know the first thing about her (because it would've taken another few days to get her fingerprints off the change she gave me). It's bad enough I have to be a casualty of my own ghosts — she and the people I live my life with don't deserve to be, too.

I've indulged in my past enough. Maybe I don't have a future at all — maybe the Freemasons or the Mormons or those damn ninjas from Portugal finally will track me down. Maybe my heart will just explode.

Maybe that last squirrel had rabies. I can't keep track of all my impending reapers, and I can't be bothered to try. I've actually got a future — swift and fleeting as it might prove to be — it's just so much harder to live with the uncertainty and dynamic flow of history still being written. Guess I gotta try.

And there's an entire fleet of graduates who are reaching that exact same conclusion, isn't there? I'd love to leave this place except ... well, I do have a great parking spot. And I might have finally found exactly what I've been searching this place, looking so many years for ...

But to you, leaving K-State's freshly mowed lawns, intent on gouging your way through the real world, let me beg you not to make the same mistakes I did and, truthfully, still do. Just go. Don't become shackled by your past. What's past, as they say, is merely prologue.

I want you to practice what I know but have trouble putting into motion myself, simpering hypocrite that I am. Go from this place and blaze a trail so bright we all can follow — or at least take inspiration from it. Take the jump from this nest and give those wings a good flap or two. You'll be surprised how far you can fly when you're ready. Don't look back. This place might've helped make you what you are — it is not who you are. You are more than the sum of all your yesterdays — whether it's measured on a stopwatch or a calendar, you're heir to a future of awesome possibilities and infinite potential. See your future for what it is — not what you were — by looking ahead.

Go now. Don't turn around. Don't look back.

Decision to compare Holocaust with INS raid wrong

I deeply regret that Tuesday was the last class George Kren taught. He retired this semester after 35 years of instruction and scholarship at K-State. Dandri Thompson could have learned a lot from him about the Holocaust.

Her decision to compare the Holocaust with the Immigration and Naturalization Service's raid on the Gonzalez home is regrettable. In fact, she even says "we're not headed to a genocide." If this is true, why did she use the Holocaust as an example? Because the Holocaust is the phrase of choice to vilify people and governments. However, this political manipulation of the Holocaust must end for us to ever learn the lessons of the event. Confusing government action taken to enforce the rule of law with the genocide of millions contributes to this trivialization of the Holocaust.

I am not sure why she believes the INS's execution of justice compares to the Holocaust, and her attempt to defend herself from criticism deserves further discussion. She, like many other activists such as the National Rifle Association and pro-life groups, have fallaciously argued similarities between her cause and the Holocaust that are not supported by the historical record. It is time we eliminate these ill-informed acts of trivialization from our discourse.

As usual, her pre-emptory argument to her critics is "That's what those innocent Germans thought, too." However, the Holocaust did not happen to the Germans; rather, German citizens willingly participated in and supported a culture that incorporated anti-Semitism into their laws and customs.

Adolf Hitler never seized power from anyone. He was elected by the people of Germany and enjoyed popular support throughout most of his reign.

Even if you could prove Germans (Jewish people and other "undesirables" already had been defined as non-citizens) disagreed with the practices of the Holocaust, their inaction does not deserve our praise.

In fact, most, if not all, credible historians have traced the roots of Germanic and other forms of European anti-Semitism to prove that governments merely facilitated the expression of such hatred; they did not foster it.

GUEST VIEWPOINT WEST

terribly misinformed NRA about how the first thing the Nazi government did was to take everyone's guns. Good luck finding any credible historian who has found any evidence to support this claim. The only rights taken were the rights of the "undesirables" to live. Even if you were correct that the government was interfering in the lives of a family, does this truly equate to the systematic annihilation of millions of people?

The only thing Thompson got right in her column disproves her argument. The following statements are quotes from her column.

"In Germany, people thought the issue was a poor economy and a lack of national pride." They believed Jews were the cause of this economic decline due to their usury and they were to blame for the loss in the First World War.

"But to Adolf Hitler, the issue was hate." Hitler facilitated a process for the Germans and other nations to eliminate what they viewed as the source of the problems.

Obviously, Thompson paid about as much attention in her classes that dealt with the Holocaust as she did to her journalism classes when they instructed her to report the situation accurately. Trivialization of the Holocaust is far more likely to cause repression than any raid by the INS. Lay off of the hyperbolic arguments ... Thompson actually might articulate a decent argument if she would look at the facts of a situation instead of the political spin.

Finally, if anything is genocidal — or close to it — in this episode, it is the continued embargo of the Cuban people that has been quietly swept under the rug in this whole affair.

If we only spent as much time worrying about the Cuban embargo and the people dying from our outdated foreign policy as we did about the actions of the Justice Department, the world might be a better place.

Warrant for Elian search fits none of categories

Editor,

I, too, am concerned with the accurate presentation of the facts concerning Elian Gonzales.

I believe David Vogel mostly was correct in his observations in his letter Tuesday. However, I think an oversight of his greatly overshadowed the problem of the raid on the home of the fisherman who rescued Elian.

Vogel's assertion that the Fourth Amendment was upheld by the acquisition of a warrant is the crux of the matter. This statement says the Justice Department had the right to raid the home in search of Elian. However, there are a few kinds of warrants and none of them fit the situation.

Which warrant was served in the attempt to return Elian to his father? Was it one that allowed the search in order to capture a harbored criminal? No.

Was it one that allowed the search for criminal evidence? Not that one, either.

Well, what was it? Those are the two with which people are most familiar.

Actually, the warrant was for the search for an illegal alien. There are problems with this.

The fact is that Elian (whether of his own volition or not) was seeking asylum. It was my understanding that once an alien begins the process of applying for asylum, they have the right to stay here until denied their request. Thus, the warrant and the Fourth Amendment were misapplied. There were no grounds to capture him, as he was here legally.

This abuse truly is the focal point of the raid. If the Justice Department had not used false pretenses, they would not have been able to acquire the warrant. This, in turn, would have prevented the public from perceiving an abuse of power in the more disturbing facets of the raid. The raid simply would not have been able to occur.

In this day and age of information, it seems hard to believe that what you do not always hear the whole story. Yet, it is easy to get wrapped up in the excitement without truly trying to sort out the details and, more importantly, the assumptions.

So, I do have to agree with

Vogel: "It is important for people to vigilantly guard against abuses by the government." In addition, "it is equally as important to apply the correct legal analysis."

In this case, Vogel's good intentions are somewhat overshadowed by his oversight concerning the nature of the Justice Department's warrant.

CNS wrong to disallow downloading of MP3s

Editor,

Last week, as I sat blissfully in a classroom soaking up the intoxicating fumes of knowledge, some depraved people in Computing and Network Services hatched an unnatural plot to make my life less happy.

I refer to their denunciation of the computer program called Napster, a well-engineered piece of software that allows people around the world to share MP3 files with one another.

CNS claims the program eats valuable system resources and it should not be used, especially as its purpose falls outside the boundaries established for campus Internet hook-ups.

How can they do this to us, the student body? We support the university technology systems with our hard-borrowed tuition money, and this is the payment we receive for our efforts? The least they can do is allow 20 percent of the students at K-State to download 5-megabyte files two or three times a day.

It only adds up to an amount of data somewhere between 60 and 70 gigabytes daily — which is about 10 times larger than the average computer hard drive.

After all, the only people who really need the Internet for educational purposes are those few who have to use library resources and other online information for assigned projects.

This so-called video conferencing — it can't possibly be that important. Who are these students to stand in the way of my entertainment? I must have my MP3s.

After reading my letter, I'm sure you'll agree that I have the right — nay, the responsibility — to exercise my student computing privileges. It's really just the principle of the thing. I don't need to have music, but I feel I must take the moral high ground — never mind the dubious morality of the worldwide distribution of copyrighted songs via MP3 — and stand up for my convictions.

Join me in my fight, and together we can make the world a better place for connoisseurs of pirated music everywhere.

Writer perseveres after drug placed in beverage

Editor,

It's my birthday.

My friends and I go out. I am so happy to have them here with me, because they care so much. Though I am surrounded by wonderful people, there still remains a darkness that soon will come into my life.

I am not much of a drinker. I don't like alcohol very much. I do like a social drink on occasion — like a birthday, for example — but for some reason, someone decides I need a little something extra in my drink.

I am standing around with my friends, talking, laughing and dancing a little. I only have had two drinks, but that is enough for me.

All of a sudden, my chest begins to hurt. Sometimes this occurs when I have a drink, so I usually just discontinue drinking for the evening.

I soon become become thirsty. I run for the bar to get some water and I have to sit down.

Before long, I feel like there is a pair of vise grips squeezing the life out of me between my back and my chest.

I am shaking.

I need more water, but I cannot hold onto my glass.

My neck is numb. Slowly, the numbness crawls up my face to my eyes. They feel like they are going to combust — almost like they are bleeding.

My friends take me outside. I cannot stand and everything is blurry. Where am I?

My heart rate is dangerously high, but I cannot feel my heart beating. I am shaking. I cannot stand nor hold my glass of water. I almost pass out.

What is going on? I don't know.

My friends are here with me and keep telling me I need to go to the hospital — but I won't. I know it will pass and, an hour later, it does.

You know who you are, and you know what you did.

I am a strong, independent woman with real morals. I don't get drunk, I don't sleep around and I respect others and their feelings — not to mention their health.

I guess this gives you a reason to try to take advantage of me, but you failed.

You know you cannot get a woman with any respect for herself, because you don't know what respect is, so instead, you think you need to use a drug. You tried to hurt me, but you failed because someone like me only becomes stronger with life-changing experiences such as this.

You know who you are, and you will not win.

Writer's column wrong concerning Constitution

Editor,

I am writing in regard to Danedri Thompson's column "3 Amendments to U.S. Constitution Violated." This had to be one of the most misinformed and sloppily researched columns I ever have seen in the Collegian.

First, on the Fourth Amendment, Thompson states INS burst in "arguably without a search warrant." OK, Thompson, let me do the research for you. Go to www.herald.com/content/archive/news/raffers99/insdocs/content.htm. There you can find a copy of the signed warrant itself, the application for that warrant, as well as an eight-page affidavit the magistrate relied upon to find probable cause to issue the warrant. Look it up.

Second, as to the Sixth Amendment, your argument that due process of law was violated fails because there was a valid warrant.

Third, Lazaro Gonzalez did not have custody as Thompson claims. He had been granted an emergency temporary protective order, but when his petition for temporary custody later was dismissed, Lazaro Gonzalez had no legal basis to exercise control over Elian. The INS became Elian's legal guardian under immigration laws. Thus, Thompson is blatantly wrong when she states, "they were well within their rights to refuse to return the boy when ordered, because they were, and technically still are, the boy's legal guardian." A little simple research would have cleared this misconception up.

Finally, Thompson speaks of the Second Amendment right to bear arms. Here, her argument falls off the map. Did the government ever take any of Lazaro Gonzalez's guns, or prevent him from owning any? No. A SWAT team entering your house has nothing to do with your right to bear arms, as Thompson suggests.

I fully can understand the differing political and emotional views surrounding this case.

But to allow this ignorance of the facts and the law to be printed, especially without any basic research being done, is journalism of which the Collegian should be ashamed.

L.A. student has solution for KSU parking problem

Editor,

I think this problem with the parking isn't really a problem at all; I think that if we all look at the big picture, it will solve itself.

I am from Los Angeles, and the way UCLA solved this problem should be instituted here. What they did was to make a 10-mile halo around the campus, and anyone outside of that halo could be eligible for a permit.

It is so simple, one almost feels stupid. Now, I don't think we should have a 10-mile boundary, but I do think we should have a mile or two limit as to who should be eligible to park on campus.

I don't want any of the greeks to get all bent out of shape, but when I see a car with any of the greek letters on it parked on campus, I think to myself, "What a lazy ass." Many of the houses are located only a few blocks from campus, and some are right across the street from Throckmorton Hall.

I don't care what the temperature is outside. You are young, so you can walk. This goes for all students who live right off campus and choose to drive the two or so blocks.

Otherwise, we will be forced to fight for the precious few parking spots that remain after everyone has driven a block or two.

Student suggests ideas for campus bike problem

Editor,

It has come to my attention that there is a problem with bicycles on campus.

The origins of this problem range from someone walking a bike through the hallway, to locking a tree or railing, to being run down on the way to class.

After doing some research, I think I understand the problem. No one knows the rules.

I spoke with the campus bicycle officer.

He informed me he doesn't have a lot of repeat offenders. Once they find out what the rules are, they pretty much obey them.

My next stop was Parking Services. Here, I was informed there is a requirement that all bikes be registered with Parking Services. When bicyclists register their bikes, they are given a pamphlet containing the rules.

All I had to do was look at the Web page and I realized why only one of every 10 bikes at K-State is registered. The Web page was blank. Thus, unless you register your bike, you cannot learn the rules.

Here is my solution.

First, let's complete the Web page. A little information goes a long way.

Second, when new students go to orientation, give them a pamphlet at that time.

Third, put up signs at all bicycle racks, stating that students must register bikes. This will give them a second opportunity to hand out rules.

Finally, impose a $3 fine on unregistered bikes. That would encourage students to have their bikes registered, since registration is free.

I believe this would solve the bike problem here at K-State.

DEFEAT

K-State strands 11 baserunners against Shockers, brings losing streak to 7

K-State simply never did the right thing at the right time in the Wildcats' 7-2 loss to Wichita State on Tuesday at Frank Myers Field.

K-State head coach Mike Clark simplified it further.

"We gave it to them," he said. "Between the walks, the impatience at the plate — we ground into four double plays on five pitches, and fielder Brian Burgamy flied out to Weishaar in left field.

Lundwall escaped the second and third innings with inning-ending double plays and made it through the fourth, giving up only a walk before Wichita State got on the board in the fifth, scoring two runs.

Then came the sixth inning, when K-State committed three errors, which led to five runs, three earned, for the Shockers.

"We had a couple of opportunities to knock it down to a two-run inning or a three-run inning if we make a play, and we didn't make a play," Clark said. "That's disappointing."

Even more troublesome for the Cats was that, despite scoring only two runs, the Wildcats put themselves in position to score runs in nearly every inning.

In the bottom of the second, junior first baseman Mark English was hit by a pitch to lead off the inning. Junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger followed with the first K-State hit of the day, a single through the right side of the infield. Junior outfielder Benton Oleen then bunted back to the pitcher, Brandon Sloan, who threw out English at third on a questionable call. Senior second baseman Chad Tabor then ended the inning when he grounded into a double play.

Similar episodes took place in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh innings before K-State plated their first run in the eighth.

Freshman center fielder Joey Ammirato and junior catcher Graham McAllister opened the inning with consecutive walks. Weishaar then cracked a single between the first and second base gap to load the bases with no outs. After freshman DH Pat Maloney struck out, English knocked in Ammirato with a single, his team-leading 44th RBI. The Wildcats then left the bases loaded when Loudabarger struck out and Oleen popped up to second base.

"It was like pressure was on us to hurry up and hit the ball for some reason, and when we did our damage the last two innings, we were taking until we got a strike," Clark said. "Who knows how many runs we score at the end of the ball game if we don't get picked off."

English, Weishaar and Tabor led the 10-hit K-State attack, each producing two hits, while Tabor and Ammirato accounted for the two Wildcat runs.

K-State (17-27) will face Wichita State (32-15) again at 7 tonight in Wichita at Eck Stadium. Clark said either junior Scott Tallman (0-2) or sophomore Chad Duckers (3-4) will start from the mound.

Clark said he didn't know where to rate Wichita State in comparison to Big 12 teams, but that he would be able to tell after Wednesday's game. His concerns, however, were getting his team to be patient, he said.

"We have to shake ourselves, come back tomorrow and play the way we're capable of playing," Clark said.

K-State baseball celebrates 100 years by naming all-century team

By SAM STIERS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State baseball is 100 years old, and to celebrate, the university named its all-century team Tuesday.

Former K-State players were voted onto the team by a group of present and former Wildcat head coaches and lettermen. There are 21 players on the squad, and five of the players were named to a combined total of 10 All-American teams.

Chicago White Sox team member Craig Wilson highlights the list. Wilson is the only Wildcat player to be named conference player of the year. He earned the honor in 1992. There also are four other former major-league players on the list: Elden Auker, Ted Power, Andy Replogle and Keith "Kite" Thomas.

The all-century team will be introduced before the K-State-Kansas game Saturday at Frank Myers Field.

The ceremony will be part of the Farm Bureau All-Century Celebration Weekend, which will last during the three-game series against the Jayhawks.

Leaving early for NBA draft not good idea

It's a hard concept to fathom.

Picture a college basketball player, fresh off a stellar performance in his sophomore season — two more bright years ahead of him before he's NBA-bound.

Then he decides to declare for the draft early.

Call it pressure, call it a family-based financial decision, call it what you will — but it's simply not a good idea to forgo your last two years of college basketball for the NBA.

It's ridiculous. Some guys might not even be first-round picks, which means they won't even be guaranteed to make any money.

Heck, we've got high school kids trying to skip college and expecting to succeed at the professional level. This year, 6-foot-8-inch Darius Miles, prep senior out of East St. Louis, Ill., is one of several expected to declare for the draft in hopes of a lottery selection.

Now don't get me wrong, there have been several athletes who made the jump from high school to the NBA in extraordinary fashion. Just look at Kevin Garnett and Kobe Bryant — they're NBA All-Stars. But the thing is, those type of athletes are diamonds in the rough, and boys in high school can't expect to make that kind of transition.

It's about as absurd as community-college players hoping to be a lottery pick in the draft. Oh wait, I'm sorry, we do have some lucky boys hoping just that.

Ernest Brown and Cory Hightower, sophomores out of Indian Hills (Iowa) Community College, already have made their declaration. Hey, at least they both decided to enter together for moral support when they don't get chosen in the first round.

Regardless, I just don't understand their decisions, especially when you consider that high school and community-college players forfeit their college eligibility when they declare.

I'm sure I'll be able to hear Brown and Hightower's whimpering cries all the way from Iowa when their lottery dreams fall through and their college careers are terminated.

Let's just hope this year's group of over-eager high school phenoms don't go that route. Miles has a bright future with St. John's, and the Redmen will need some new talent after losing Lavar Postell to graduation and sophomore Erick Barkley to the draft.

Yet, just in case any of you underclassmen are out there with hopes of NBA stardom, I'd just like to let you know that you have until the May 14 deadline for early entry declaration into the draft. Hurry up, guys, only 11 days left to make one of the worst decisions of your life. You know you want to.

Everybody else is doing it, right?

As a matter of fact, 16 underclassmen already have declared, and at least five or six more are expected by mid-May (emphasis on the words "at least"). If you look at the age breakdown of those 16 already committed, it consists of a field of two college freshmen, a whopping nine sophomores and five juniors.

Honestly, Iowa State junior Marcus Fizer is the only lock to be a top-five draft selection. In fact, I'd probably pick him to go in the top two.

Otherwise, freshman DerMarr Johnson of Cincinnati looks like a solid selection anywhere from 10th to 15th overall. His 6-foot-9-inch size and versatility at the guard position is hard to pass up.

But truthfully, I think many of this year's early entries are throwing their basketball careers away. Look at Connecticut junior Khalid El-Amin. He's got about as much chance as former K-Stater Mark Young of being a high draft pick. Well, maybe it's not that far-fetched, but you get my point.

So here's my advice to all you underclassmen out there: REMOVE YOUR NAMES. You've got until June 21 to pull out and return to your respective collegiate programs.

In the words of movie character Billy Madison, "Stay as long as you can, and by God, cherish it." You've got the promise, but the development and maturity just isn't quite there yet. It just takes time.

Then, in a couple of years (or three or four) down the road, you'll be ready to declare and take your game to the next level.

But until then, have fun in college and get that education. Heck, even lead your team to the NCAA Final Four.

Just don't fall into the trap like many athletes before you, because it only takes one mistake to throw your hopes and dreams away.

Derek Boss is a freshman in pre-journalism. You can e-mail him at dnb8765@ksu.edu.

that's just ridiculous."

As far as the walks, the Cats gave up seven to the Shockers, but the bigger story was that K-State left 11 men on base, including two in the bottom of the ninth, after junior left fielder Kasey Weishaar was picked off first base to end the game immediately following his single that made the score 7-2.

"To get picked off five runs down for the last out of the ball game — that's embarrassing," Clark said.

K-State starting pitcher Todd Lundwall (1-4) took the loss, pitching 5 1/3 innings, allowing six runs, five earned on seven hits, while walking five and striking out two.

The freshman right-hander was making just his second start of the season and pitched himself into and out of jams until the fifth inning. Lundwall walked three in the first to load the bases with two outs, but escaped when Shockers' center not disclosed, and K-State assistant sports information director Tom Gilbert said neither of the players did anything illegal.

The Cats this season already have dismissed Collin Yoachim, who was arrested on a DUI charge.

Gilbert said the two incidents are different, and the suspensions dealt with a violation of team rules. He also said the suspensions would be re-evaluated after this season ends. Yoachim simply was dismissed, Gilbert said.

The two players had played key roles for the Cats throughout the season, but Day's season was over because of injury.

The release said he was expected to miss the rest of this season after undergoing Tommy John surgery, a surgery performed to repair an injured elbow.

Before his injury, Day had played in 19 games and posted a .238 batting average.

Robertson, however, was coming into his own as a K-State pitcher.

He had a 3-7 record and a 5.38 ERA in 13 appearances. He ends the season leading the team in innings pitched (75) and strikeouts (73).

This was the first season for both players, who had transferred to K-State from community-college programs.

They had neither traveled nor participated in the Missouri series last weekend.

K-State head coach Mike Clark would not comment on the matter, as is consistent with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' policy on personnel matters.

Tim Taylor, Barbara Walter and Andy Garcia are just a few of the famous names walking around Manhattan.

Having a famous name has some interesting connotations. Taylor, senior in construction science, said his name has brought positive and negative effects to his life.

"Being at college has brought with it even more attention to my name than before," he said. "On the days when a professor calls roll, I often get called 'the tool man' instead of Tim Taylor. Everyone also finds it very fitting that I am in construction science. I figured that there was no other major for me."

The problem with having the same name as a celebrity or character lies in the fact that people are constantly bringing attention to the famous name, Garcia, junior in elementary education, said.

"It is cool because when I introduce myself people always remember, but then again, that is the only reason why they remember sometimes," Garcia said. "Teachers remember me and girls remember me, so that is the plus side of it. Then you have those people who always remind you or make fun of you when you are writing out a check or something. It does get old after a while."

Another K-State student by the name of Tim Taylor, a first-year veterinary student, was surprised to find there was another Tim Taylor enrolled on campus.

"I transferred in from UNL, so I am getting a whole other round of the recognition," he said. "I get pretty much the same problem as anyone else who has a famous name. People laugh when you use your credit card and write checks. I think that it can become bothersome at some point, but at least I am not a girl named Monica Lewinsky. That would be a real problem."

Sometimes having a famous name can even cause problems when trying to simply enjoy yourself or take part in activities that you enjoy. Barbara Walter, Manhattan resident, has run into this problem on several occasions.

"Almost every time I make reservations, whether it be at a hotel or restaurant, I get asked if I am the real Barbara Walters," she said. "I also hold some stock in Kmart, and I have had to reassure the analysts that keep track of the stock performance that I am only a stockholder with interest and not covering a news story."

Challenge Course aims to teach communication

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Volunteers will help 55 K-State students learn the value of trust, communication and problem-solving through the LeaderShape Institute's Team Challenge Course from May 15 to 20 at the Rock Springs 4-H Center.

"This is a chance to get students from different organizations and groups on campus apart from their classes and have them get to know each other," said Amy Donahy, assistant director at the Office of Leadership Studies and Programs.

Freshmen to returning seniors are eligible to participate in the program, and five spots remain for this summer's session.

This is the first year a session of LeaderShape has come to K-State.

In the past, the program had taken place only at the national LeaderShape Institute in Champaign, Ill., Donahy said.

"The purpose of LeaderShape is to have good leadership development, communication and working in group problem solving exercises to help students when they get back to school," she said.

The program features two main LeaderShape facilitators from the University of Illinois and Salt Lake City. K-State faculty and staff members will serve as small group leaders, including Gayle Spencer from the Office of Student Life, Candice Pitts from Education and Personal Development Programs, Derek Jackson from the Department of Housing and Dining, Tracy Rutherford from the Department of Agriculture Communications and Jack Taylor from Student Financial Assistance.

In addition to the Team Challenge Course, which is a half-day outdoor team-building experience, students also will construct a vision statement or plan to implement certain activities when they return to campus.

"Sharing the vision statement with others and making yourself responsible for going for it and putting that plan into practice was an outstanding part of LeaderShape," Leo Prieto, senior in modern languages, said.

Prieto, staff assistant at leadership studies, attended a session of the LeaderShape Institute in Illinois and said he felt it helped him to develop teamwork skills.

"We were put into groups with people we've never met, but we felt like we knew each other really well by the end of the week," he said. "We developed trust and understanding, which you need when you're involved in organizations. You have to have that unity and mutual respect for one another."

Kara Gray, freshman in physics, said she signed up to attend LeaderShape to generate ideas for her clubs and activities. She is involved in the Physics and Astronomy clubs and lives in a residence hall.

"It sounded like a really neat opportunity, and I talked with someone who had gone to the national program. It sounded like a great experience and it gave very practical information," Gray said.

Counties suffer despite booming economy

By TANNER EHMKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas, along with the rest of the country, has been experiencing unprecedented economic growth for nearly a decade. Unemployment is at an all-time low, the consumer base is climbing and retail sales are growing.

However, one K-State professor has discovered that not everyone prospers in prosperous times. There are many counties in Kansas that have not seen the benefits of the past 10 years.

In a series of recent studies conducted by David Darling, a K-State community development economist, it was discovered that from 1991 to 1998, total personal income in Kansas increased by 45 percent before adjusting for inflation. The consumer base increased by 3.4 percent, and 68 counties had an increase in employed residents.

But for a majority of Kansas counties, the news was not so welcome.

Since 1991, 78 of the counties lost consumer base to more prosperous counties located near metropolitan areas. Sixteen counties have been particularly prosperous in these prosperous times, Darling said. Nine of those 16 are heavily influenced by economic growth in the Kansas City and Wichita areas. The most successful counties seem to show up in clusters, he said.

"There is a tougher challenge on rural areas," Darling said. "There is not a large mass of human capital. They export their best and brightest youth, and they may not have an up-to-date information structure."

Many small communities also are not homes to firms leading their industry, Darling said. They are not hosts to headquarters or nerve centers of corporations where there are highly paid people.

Darling often travels to rural communities in need of help while trying to survive, even during economically prosperous times. The many of Kansas' counties wading through economic hardships are in the central to western part of the state, where population is sparse and development is difficult.

In Darling's study, nine of the 10 counties experiencing the greatest decline in civilian employment were in central to western Kansas, with five counties losing jobs in double-digit figures from 1991 economic growth

Since 1991, civilian jobs in Kansas have increased by 12 percent, showing signs of positive economic growth. Of the state's 105 counties, 68 have experienced an increase in employment, 33 have experienced a decrease in employment and 4 have experienced no growth.

to 1998.

"The data raises the question, 'Who is prospering in prosperous times, and who is not?'" Darling said. "One way of looking at different prosperity is how well the population of a county is employed and how that has changed over time."

The agricultural economist provides information and advice to small rural communities on how to grow their small economy.

The community must first find their leadership. The leaders then organize their community, work with the local government and have a vision and a plan to get there.

"It's a lot of work. Some communities just choose not to do that work," Darling said. "They can't find the leadership to move the community forward."

Companies reach truce; ABC temporarily restored

By DAVID BAUDER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Time Warner called a sudden truce Tuesday in the corporate brawl that deprived 3.5 million cable TV customers of ABC for more than 27 hours, restoring the channel in time for viewers to see "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?"

The cable company and the Walt Disney Co., ABC's parent, didn't settle their differences but set a new deadline of July 15 for their negotiations over compensation for cable channels.

Customers had responded angrily when Time Warner systems in seven cities, including New York, Houston and Los Angeles, stopped airing ABC programs at 12:01 a.m. Monday. The blackout started a run on rabbit-ear antennae and satellite TV systems.

The compromise came in the middle of a news conference called by Time Warner Cable chairman Joseph Collins. He was offering Disney a six-month extension to continue airing ABC's signal, without resolving the disputed issue of cable compensation.

Disney had earlier rejected an eight-month extension. Collins said ABC programming would not be restored until ABC had agreed to the extra time.

In the midst of the news conference, broadcast live by Time Warner-owned CNN, Collins stepped away from the podium to confer with his executives. He returned to the microphone to announce that Disney had offered an extension until July 15.

"We're going to accept this," Collins said.

Within a half hour, WABC-TV in New York was back on the air, showing "General Hospital." In Raleigh, N.C., ABC returned with "Oprah" at 4 p.m.

ABC issued a statement saying it was gratified that Time Warner is now making the viewers their first priority.

"We are broadcasters and until yesterday had provided uninterrupted service to all viewers for 47 years. Wanting to restore service as quickly as possible to those who depend on us, we, too, are willing to compromise," ABC said.

Medical MD & Veterinary Programs

Hope Medical Institute (HMI) is currently accepting applications for September/October 2000 semesters from committed students. If you are:

- College graduate with pre-med or pre-vet background
- College graduate without pre-med or pre-vet background
- 2-year college education with concentration in science courses
- High school graduate who wants to become a M.D. or D.V.M.

The next semester starts September/October 2000 at our affiliated Universities in Poland. Courses are conducted in the English language. The institutions and programs are well recognized by the World Health Organization, American Medical and Veterinary Exam Boards as well as the U.S. Department of Education.

Full financing by the U.S. Government is available. Due to very limited time and availability of space, apply immediately if you think you have what it takes to be a good physician or veterinarian. Call for further information at:

Looking for an ADVENTURE

THE ADVENTURE OF A LIFETIME BEGINS WITH AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective... but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation — as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try — you won't regret it.

Engineering teams place at regional conference

By TANNER EHMKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time, both divisions of K-State's American Society of Civil Engineers qualified to compete in the national competitions this summer.

The ASCE team competed Thursday-Saturday at the Midwest conference at the University of Missouri-Rolla. The team won first place in the steel bridge competition and second place in the concrete canoe race.

"It's the first time in a while we can actually go to the national competition," said Jerrid Dinnen, chairman of the concrete canoe team. "We're very excited about going. We worked very hard this year. We're looking forward to competing against some of the top ranked teams in the nation."

Dinnen, senior in civil engineering, and the team of about 17 members who went to the conference, had been working on the project since the beginning of last semester. The team designs, constructs and tests a canoe made of concrete for the purpose of racing.

However, the boat was not made of the regular materials such as gravel and sand, Dinnen said. Fly ash, which is a byproduct of coal, and a ceramic sphere were used as substitutes to make the canoe lighter.

The team also used ideas from canoes constructed in the past to make it stronger and durable, yet still light-weight.

"We have little to no faculty help," Dinnen said. "It's all student run."

Matt Tollefson, president of ASCE, said the canoe team has improved immensely over the past three years. The team decided to start making improvements when it placed last in the competition three years ago. The canoe made then weighed 250 pounds. This year's canoe weighed in at 150 pounds, greatly improving the speed.

The team encountered many other obstacles over the yearlong process, Tollefson, senior in civil engineering, said. Finding out what materials are needed and obtaining them from donors was a significant problem, Dinnen said. The team experimented with different design mixes to find the right material mix. Getting younger students involved proved to be another obstacle, he said.

"We hope our success increases involvement," Tollefson said.

The national concrete canoe conference will meet June 24-26 in Golden, Colo.

Like the concrete canoe team, the steel bridge team hasn't been to the national competition before. The steel bridge team competition will meet May 20 and 21 at Texas A&M University.

The steel bridge team won awards for efficiency, stiffness and aesthetics, winning the overall competition.

"Next year, the schools will arrive to the competition with a design like ours," said Brian Austin, chairman of the steel bridge team. "The competition will be tougher next year."

Because of the remodeling of Seaton Hall, the team had to build most of the bridge at Austin's home in Topeka.

"I didn't even know how to weld before," Austin, junior in civil engineering, said. "All the other schools had theirs professionally fabricated."

The team still intends to make improvements for next year's competition in Arkansas. Next year's bridge should have better joints and be simpler to construct during the competition.

"We've never been to nationals before," Austin said. "You don't know what kind of help the other teams have had on their projects. But I wouldn't have believed you if you told me we would have taken first this year."

Puerto Ricans protest U.S. Navy's bombing site

By CHRIS HAWLEY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico — With a showdown looming over the U.S. Navy's prime Atlantic training ground, protesters who have blocked bombing for over a year said Tuesday that federal agents would have to arrest them to clear the range but promised they would not fight back.

Supporters from the U.S. mainland, including U.S. legislators Luis V. Gutierrez and Nydia Velazquez, promised Tuesday to join the protesters, and national and international church councils urged President Clinton to call off any planned raid.

Scores of Puerto Ricans kept a vigil at the main gate to the restricted Navy compound on Vieques Island, jeering at soldiers in passing Humvees. With three U.S. warships offshore, the occupiers readied for what they called the invasion with goggles, petroleum jelly and vinegar-soaked rags to protect against tear gas.

"They are trying to create panic among the people with this deployment," protester Robert Rabin told the crowd, referring to the arrival of three U.S. warships reportedly carrying 1,000 Marines.

The range has been occupied by protesters since a civilian security guard was killed by stray bombs in April 1999, releasing pent-up frustrations throughout Puerto Rico, a U.S. territory of 4 million people. Arrests planned this week would be carried out in an operation directed by the Justice Department, Pentagon officials said.

The Pentagon said its range on the eastern third of Vieques is vital to national security because it provides live-fire combat training before every deployment of Atlantic Fleet carrier battle groups abroad, practicing precision bombing as well as amphibious assaults.

About 50 protesters at several camps inside the range are blocking a Jan. 31 directive by President Clinton allowing the Navy to resume limited training until Vieques' 9,400 residents decide in a referendum — probably next year — whether the Navy should leave.

The Navy announced Tuesday that, under Clinton's directive, it will begin removing 1,600 tons of munitions from the western third of Vieques on Thursday in order to transfer the federal land — nearly 8,000 acres — to Puerto Rico later this year.

Holocaust survivors join in march

By MONIKA SCISLOWSKA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OSWIECIM, Poland — Warning against attempts to deny the horrors of the Holocaust, the presidents of Israel and Poland led about 6,000 people on a solemn march Tuesday, retracing the path prisoners once took to the Auschwitz gas chambers.

Holocaust survivors joined thousands of students from Israel, Poland and other countries for the annual March of the Living, intended to spread awareness of the World War II tragedy.

The procession followed the two-mile path from the Auschwitz camp to its gas chambers at Birkenau. Marchers placed wooden tablets inscribed with victims' names on the nearby railway tracks, on which cattle wagons packed with doomed deportees once rolled in from all over Europe.

The Nazis killed more than 1 million Jews at Birkenau between 1940 and 1945 while occupying Poland.

In an emotional speech in Hebrew at the end of the march, Israeli President Ezer Weizman stressed the need to keep the victims in memory as a warning to future generations.

The story of the torture and murder of the Jews of Europe will never let go of the conscience of civilized people around the world, despite the tireless energy of the Holocaust deniers, said Weizman, 76, standing near the ruins of the gas chambers.

A Polish professor lost his university job last month after publishing a book questioning the Holocaust. And, in a high-profile case, British historian David Irving, who has written that the number of Jews killed by the Nazis was greatly exaggerated, lost a libel suit he brought against an American scholar who criticized his work.

The march started with a mournful tone from a shofar, the traditional Jewish horn. Weizman, Polish President Aleksander Kwasniewski, their wives and several Israeli parliament members led the marchers through the main Auschwitz gate marked by the inscription "Arbeit macht frei," or, "Work will make you free."

After a couple hundred yards, Kwasniewski and Weizman left the marchers to tour the Auschwitz museum, and rejoined them at the end for a solemn commemoration.

"I share your pain and reflection," Kwasniewski told the marchers. "We are here together to make sure that nobody, neither people nor nations, are ever again threatened with annihilation."

The Polish president also called on young Jews to put aside historical prejudice and see Poles as friends.

About 800 of this year's participants were not Jewish — mostly from Poland, but also several dozen from Germany and the United States, march spokesman Joram Dori said. Organizers hoped to raise that number to increase the awareness of the Holocaust among non-Jews at a time when the Holocaust gets denied even by historians, Dori said.

The first march was organized by the Israeli education ministry in 1988 on a biannual basis. Since 1996, the marches have taken place each year.

"Holocaust survivors are dying off, and we are the next (generation) so we have to spread education about the Holocaust to everyone — Jewish and non-Jewish," said high school student Greg Needel, 16, from Baltimore, Md.

Before World War II, Poland had a thriving Jewish population of 3.5 million, compared to about

Clinton signs order against discrimination

By DEB RIECHMANN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Parenting teens is just as important as maintaining a government job, President Clinton said Tuesday in signing an executive order prohibiting discrimination against parents in the federal workplace.

"Believe it or not, there are still some employers who are reluctant to hire or to promote employees who have children at home," Clinton said at a White House conference on raising and mentoring responsible teens.

"The goal of this order simply says no glass ceiling for parents," Clinton said.

The order ensures that workers are not discriminated against simply because they are parents.

It only applies to federal workers and does not require approval from Congress.

"The job they're doing at home is more important anyway, and if they can do your job, you ought not to stop them," Clinton said to employers of parents.

Parents, teens, teachers, youth workers and others attended the daylong conference, which was moderated by First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Topics included what parents and communities can do to help teens succeed, how parents can spend more time with their teens and the media's effect on youth and parenting.

Today's teens aren't different, society is, Hillary Clinton said.

"Rather than trying to make our kids somehow adapt, we should be thinking about ways that our institutions can change and be more supportive of our own kids and provide what our children have always needed — the kind of connectedness and support and love and discipline that every young person really wants and needs from us."

She announced an Internet site for teen-agers (www.america-teens.gov) to help them with homework, hobbies and careers. The site is being developed by 17 federal agencies.

In addition, she announced another site will be created where parents can find information about media ratings systems.

Republican National Committee spokesman Chris Paulitz said the conference relied heavily on liberal-minded panelists. Hillary Clinton used to say it takes a village to raise a child, Paulitz said.

"Now, all it takes is partisan Democrats and Hollywood moguls."

Actor and producer Danny DeVito, father of two teens and a 12-year-old, and his wife, actress Rhea Perlman, spoke in the East Room of the White House about successful after school initiatives in Los Angeles.

"We have to listen to kids," DeVito said. "There are so many things going through their heads. They're confused. They're mad or sad. What do they do if they don't have anybody who they can trust or turn to?"

But just being at home doesn't mean parents are emotionally involved with their teens, said Dr. Robert Blum, director of general pediatrics and adolescent health at the University of Minnesota. Going shopping or tossing a football does not bond parents and teens, he said.

"I challenge adults to include us, encourage us, have faith in youth of all ages," said Gabriella Contreras, a 14-year-old activist in Tucson, Ariz. "Volunteer with us to make a difference in our community, to enable us to have a voice ... or just get involved with our daily lives."

HIGH FLYIN'

STORIES BY SARAH MCCAFFREY

Worlds of Fun adds new roller coaster, prepares for summer season

Fasten your safety belts and keep your hands inside the ride as Worlds of Fun gears up for its 28th season in Kansas City, Mo.

The No. 1 tourist attraction in the Kansas City area officially opened its gates for business April 8 with the debut of the park's newest feature, the Boomerang roller coaster.

Besides the Boomerang, the park offers roller coaster fanatics several options. In 1998, the park added the Mamba coaster, which is ranked as one of the top 10 coasters in the world.

Kathy Bellew, public relations manager for Worlds of Fun, said the Mamba and the Boomerang are the most popular rides at the park.

"My favorite ride is the Mamba because it goes fast," Josh Preston, freshman in computer engineering, said.

Another coaster that has been ranked one of the top coasters in the world is the wooden coaster, the Timberwolf. The ride, which is located in the Americana section of the park, opened in 1989 and still remains a major attraction at the park.

The park also offers attractions for those who aren't roller coaster fans.

Fury of the Nile is a 4.5 minute water ride that takes riders six at a time over a course consisting of 850,000 gallons of water and five acres of wooded scenery. The rafts float along on their own course, making each trip different.

OPERATING HOURS

Saturdays and Sundays until May 21.

Summer

May 22-Aug. 27, open at 10 a.m.

The park will return to weekend only operation Sept. 9-Oct. 22.

$31.95 — for single day for those taller than 48 inches.

$15.95 — Twilight admission available after 4 p.m.

$65 — season passport.

The Skyliner brings a traditional amusement atmosphere to the park. The ride is located in the Americana section and provides its riders with a panoramic view of the entire park.

Worlds of Fun also sponsors several different events throughout the season.

"We have band and choir festivals, dance festivals and Halloween," Bellew said. "People come and play at the park when they're done competing. People are welcome to come out and watch."

The park also features a laser light show that starts in June. The Summer Spectacular Laser Light Show debuted at the park in 1997 as part of the park's 25th anniversary celebration.

With so many different attractions, the park appeals to more than just children, Kristie Schemm, junior in art education, said.

"I like to go with my friends," Schemm said. "Last time I went I rode everything and got sick. I think I'm getting to old to go, but I'll go back with my friends if they want to go."

Boomerang newest ride at park

At Worlds of Fun theme park in Kansas City, Mo., it's out with the old and in with the new.

The latest addition to the theme park is Boomerang, a ride that replaces the Zambezi Zinger in the African section of the park.

Kathy Bellew, public relations manager for Worlds of Fun, said the park tries to add a new attraction every year.

The ride consists of two towers, and each are 12 stories tall. It also has two 125-foot lifts and a 60-foot vertical loop. The length of the track is about 2,000 feet, including forward and reverse movements. It was designed by Vekoma International B.V. in the Netherlands.

The ride begins when riders are pulled backwards to the top of the lift tower where the car is released. Riders go forward through the track to the second lift. Once the car reaches the top of the second lift, the same process is repeated in reverse.

The duration of the ride is about one minute, during which riders go forward, backward and upside down at speeds up to 50 miles per hour. A maximum of 1,000 people can ride the attraction each hour.

Worlds of Fun is the only amusement park in the Midwest to have a ride like Boomerang.

"We wanted to do something unique in the Midwest," Bellew said.

Reaction to the ride has been favorable despite the fact that some patrons have lost an old favorite in the Zambezi Zinger.

"The response to the Boomerang is awesome," Bellew said. "Everyone that gets off of the ride is amazed."

Ashley Hinson, sophomore in biology, went on a ride similar to the Boomerang at Six Flags amusement park in California.

"It scared me, but it was fun," she said. "It was the first time I ever rode a roller coaster."

Shaking Tree to spice up Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque

BY BROOKE ERICKSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEAN

The not-so-typical boy band, Shaking Tree, will be shaking grounds at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque at 10 p.m. Thursday.

Ari Nisman, president and CEO of Degy Management Services, Inc., said the performance is coming at a good time.

"We want to come just before students have to begin their finals," he said.

The four-man group consists of Dain Estes (vocals, guitar, mandolin), Tom Waddington (violin, mandolin), Ian Burns (bass, vocals) and Aaron Hetherington (drums, percussion), and is becoming one of the most talked-about bands around.

"Their potential is so unlimited right now," Nisman said. "There has been already a lot of talk about them, and a lot of play by commercial radio stations. The CD has caused such a stir and it hasn't even been released yet."

At Pat's on Thursday, the group's album will be available for $10. In two weeks, it will be $14.98 in record stores.

Estes started the group after leaving his former band, Turquoise Sol, and brought a lot to the new band.

"He had a great influence on the music and lyrics," Nisman said.

Shortly after the men became a band, they sent a press kit to Degy Management.

"They sent a very raggedy, and unprofessional press kit," Nisman said. "We dismissed the appearance and listened to it anyway."

He said it definitely was not a mistake.

"Their music was so captivating and unique that we signed them within a month. Their potential is endless because they have made a crossover in the markets," Nisman said. "There's country stations calling wanting to play them. There's African and Latin influences in the music. It just appeals to so many markets."

Shaking Tree has been with Degy Management for two-and-a-half years.

The 12th track on the group's new album, "One More Time," has been aired on Kansas City radio stations such as KMXV FM 93.3. They also have been invited to perform live on WDAF-TV4 at 7 a.m. Friday for Cinco de Mayo.

Shaking Tree recorded their album in Memphis, Tenn., where John Hampton produced it. Hampton also has produced albums for the Gin Blossoms and Lynyrd Skynyrd. Knot Known Records, which was their first record label, will be representing them.

COURTESY PHOTO

The group has been touring all over the United States, from as far west as Seattle to as far east as Indiana.

The group's favorite places to perform are in their hometown, Lawrence, and in Manhattan, Kansas City and Kearney, Neb.

Nisman said they try to stay loyal to their favorite places.

"We never go a month without touring these places," he said.

The Thursday show is scheduled to begin at 10:00 p.m. will have a $1 cover.

A little bit of

HISTORY

STORIES BY ANGELA KISTNER ■ PHOTOS BY KELLY GLASSCOCK

From Pony Express to famous black squirrels, Marysville has much to offer

One hour north of Manhattan, history awaits travelers of U.S. Highway 77.

Marysville, Kan., home to an original Pony Express station, several museums and historic buildings and eight historic trails, is situated in the Blue Valley, where a blue cast settles over the hills and valley.

"People are surprised that we have such beautiful country," said Judy Kracht, executive secretary of the Marysville Chamber of Commerce.

Kracht said people also are surprised that Marysville is so hilly.

"They expect it to be flat and nothing," she said.

Kracht said people come from everywhere to visit the beautiful and historic town.

"We do get a lot of travelers from both directions," she said. "People want to get off the interstate and get on the small roads to see things."

One thing travelers might be interested in seeing is the black squirrels. Entering Marysville from any direction, travelers will be greeted with the sign "Marysville, Kansas — Black Squirrel City."

Kracht said Marysville is heavily populated by black squirrels.

"You can see them just about every day," she said.

Sharon Kessinger, chairwoman of the Koester House Museum Board and co-owner of The Marysville Advocate newspaper, said there is a town ordinance designating black squirrels as the official town mascot and protecting them by law — a person can be fined $25 for harming one.

"I don't know know of anyone who would harm one intentionally, though," she said.

Recently, an injured baby black squirrel was rescued by two children and taken to K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine to be rehabilitated and reintroduced into nature.

Kessinger said the college will bring it back to Marysville and release it in the exact place it was found.

Another attraction that will catch travelers' eyes is the Koester

Two lions guard the gates of the Koester House Museum and Sculpture Garden. Laura Ingalls Wilder wrote about the two lions as her family went through Marysville in 1894 in her book, "On the Way Home."

House Museum and Sculpture Garden.

Kessinger said Charles F. Koester, who came to America from Germany, moved into the house in 1876 with his new bride. His family lived there until 1964, and in 1972, heirs of the Koester house donated it to the city to be used as a museum.

"The museum is almost completely furnished with Koester belongings," she said. "It's a neat museum."

With the house is a sculpture garden that contains 12 white bronze sculptures.

"He was trying to make his yard look like a yard in Germany," Kessinger said.

On the outside of the garden, Koester built a brick wall to keep a nearby river from flooding his gardens.

"I've been told it makes it look more like a German garden to have the wall around it," Kessinger said.

There also are two lions guarding the Koester House gates. Kessinger said Laura Ingalls Wilder wrote about the lions in her book "On the Way Home" when her family went through Marysville in 1894.

In 1998, Carol Gissom of the Conservation Analytical laboratory of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., surveyed the sculptures.

"She didn't know of any other collection of that many, especially that many that had been collected by one person," Kessinger said.

Kessinger, who has lived in Marysville for 25 years, said it has a lot of history that many people don't know.

"I think Marysville is one of the best-kept secrets in the state," she said.

Arvila Wolfe, head of the 16th Annual Pony Express Rug Hooking Workshop, works on the details of her rug Monday afternoon. The workshop attracts many people interested in rug hooking from around the nation.

Rug hooking lures Canadian to visit Kansas

Marysville, Kan., a town rich in history, also is a town rich in a certain kind of art — rug hooking.

The 16th-annual Pony Express Rug Hooking Workshop, which runs through Friday, attracts rug hookers from places all over the United States and even Canada.

Freda MacDonnell, a primitive and pictorial rug hooker, has come down from Canada to the annual workshop to teach since 1995.

Jenny Podlasek, an instructor of primitive and traditional rug hooking, came to this year's workshop from Chicago to teach for the first time.

Podlasek has been teaching rug hooking for 30 years.

"I like things, and this is an American ancient art," she said. "It's something you don't find in the stores — you have to know somebody."

Podlasek said she teaches rug hooking everywhere. "From one coast to the other," she said. "I just got back from Maryland a couple of weeks ago."

Diane and Charles Gay came from Eureka Springs, Ark., to participate in the rug-hooking workshop.

"This is our favorite workshop," Diane Gay said. "It's so friendly."

Gay was working on a rug that, when finished, will have three purple geese floating on the water. Her husband was working on a rug that had whales.

The Gays have their own shop, The Mountain Handcrafts Company, where they sell handmade items, including hooked rugs. Diane also has her own clinic for rug hooking.

Not all participants sell the rugs they make, though.

Arvila Wolfe, head of the workshop, said she doesn't sell any of her pieces.

"We give them to our children and friends," she said. "There may be a few who sell, but in our group, we don't."

Wolfe has been rug hooking for 15 years. She said she only has made six rugs, but with the rugs she also has made pillows, chair cushions and footstools.

Wolfe said that after she saw her first rug hookings 15 years ago, she has been hooked since then.

"I loved the work," she said. "I thought it was beautiful."

The rug hookings are on display for the public to see through Friday at the Lee Dam Center for Fine Arts.

The Pony Express Rug Hooking Workshop started April 30 and will run through May 5.

A section of the original Pony Express station still is preserved as part of the Pony Express Museum. The museum also houses artifacts from many different eras of Marysville history.

For a period of 18 months in the 1860s, Pony Express riders delivered mail to speed up the process across the Western frontier.

Marysville, Kan., is home to the only Pony Express Home Station left on its original site with its original building intact.

Jill Schmidt, curator of the Pony Express Museum, said the Pony Express went from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Calif.

"This is where the first rider would stop," she said.

There were two types of Pony Express stations. One was the home station, which is located in Marysville, where the riders would change. The other kind was relay stations, where horses were changed.

The Pony Express was organized by Russell, Majors and Waddell, a firm in Atchison, Kan.

A postcard for sale at the Pony Express Museum in Marysville features the help-wanted advertisement for Pony Express riders: young, skinny, wiry fellows not older than 18. They must be expert riders, willing to risk death daily.

Despite the risk of death, Schmidt said only one Pony Express rider was killed during the organization's 18 months.

"It was up in Wyoming," she said. "He was killed by Indians."

Schmidt said some riders carried a gun with them, and all riders carried a Bible with them.

"Each one was given a Bible," she said. "One of the men (Russell) was really religious and didn't want them to swear."

The goal of the Pony Express was to deliver mail in 10 days or fewer.

Schmidt said one piece of mail was delivered in eight days — news of Abraham Lincoln's inauguration.

This also was the most famous piece of mail delivered by the Pony Express, she said.

Despite delivering mail faster, the Pony Express was not profitable and eventually was replaced by the telegraph.

"By the time the Pony Express went out of business, it had lost about $250,000," Schmidt said.

The Pony Express Museum houses many artifacts from the Pony Express organization, including an inscribed Bible that a Pony Express rider carried.

Besides Pony Express artifacts, the museum also contains many other historical artifacts from that time period.

Sharon Kessinger, chairwoman of the Koester House Museum Board and co-owner of the The Marysville Advocate newspaper, said the national post office in Marysville was the first civilian post office in Kansas that still is in operation. The original post office boxes are located at the Pony Express Museum.

Kessinger said the Pony Express probably is the most original piece of history in Marysville and one of her favorite things about Marysville.

"I would say that it's the most romantic period of history," she said.

Kessinger said people come from all over to see the history of the Pony Express and that time period. There is a re-creation of the Pony Express ride by the National Pony Express Association in June, which will go through Marysville on June 22. She said people from Germany come to participate in the ride, and Czechoslovakia even has its own re-creation of the Pony Express ride.

"It seems to have captured people's imagination," Kessinger said. "It shows action of the Old West."

Causes in bonfire tragedy cited

■ Poorly built structure to blame for collapse.

By JUAN A. LOZANO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Inadequate wiring of logs and weak oversight of the building of a complex and dangerous structure were factors to blame for the deadly bonfire collapse at Texas A&M University last fall, an investigation commission announced Tuesday.

The five-member panel, disclosing the findings of its probe into the collapse that killed 12 people last November, blamed school officials and students involved in the construction of the bonfire for contributing to the disaster.

"This failure has roots in decisions and actions by both students and university officials over many years," said Leo Linbeck, a Houston construction executive who headed the panel.

"It created an environment where a complex and dangerous structure was allowed to be built without controls," he said.

But the panel said drinking and student horseplay did not play a significant role in the accident.

The pole at the center of the 59-foot pile of logs, which was supposed to serve as the spine of the stack, had very little to do with the collapse, the commission said. A crane that hit the stack did not contribute to the problem, nor did soil, ropes or other equipment that was examined by the commission.

But the report said the overall weight of the bonfire, 2 million pounds, also would have caused problems, even with perfect construction.

Students have been gathering to build the bonfire on the College Station campus each year since 1909. The Thanksgiving holiday event draws thousands on the eve of A&M's football game against its archrival, the University of Texas.

The large structure is built over several weeks with multiple stacks of full-size logs put in place by cranes, tractors and student workers. The structure — which resembles a tiered wedding cake — is designed to twist inward and collapse on itself as it burns. The center pole consists of two long telephone poles spliced together end to end and buried 15 feet deep on one end. It's held in place by guy wires.

"It's premature to speculate," on the impact the report will have on the bonfire tradition, university spokesman Lane Stephenson said Monday. "We do not anticipate any on-the-spot kind of decision."

John Comstock, 19, who left the hospital partially paralyzed last month, five months after he was pinned under timbers, said he wants the tradition to continue. Parents of some of the victims also have said their children wouldn't have wanted the tradition to end.

No lawsuits have been filed.

Linbeck has said his panel's only duty was to find the cause of the collapse, and that determining accountability was not within the group's charge.

He said the entire report will be made public over the Internet.

The possible use of alcohol also prompted the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission to conduct an investigation to find its source. That investigation is not yet complete.

The federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration also is investigating.

Dispute continues over Confederate flag

By JIM DAVENPORT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The dispute over the Confederate flag flying over the Statehouse has exposed a generation gap in the ranks of South Carolina's civil rights leaders.

Some veterans of the struggles of the 1960s support a deal under which the flag would be moved to a less conspicuous spot on the Statehouse grounds. But a younger generation of blacks wants the flag removed altogether and says the older leaders are too willing to compromise.

The flag has become a very emotional, symbolic issue, particularly for younger blacks, said Joseph Lowery, president emeritus of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the civil rights group once headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. "It has taken the place of the back of the bus."

The state Senate agreed April 13 to lower the flag as long as it is raised again above a monument to Confederate war dead on the Statehouse grounds. The House could vote as early as next week.

But many newer civil rights leaders and the NAACP say the appropriate place for the flag is in a museum. Proposals to move the flag to a less visible monument, include it in a circle of flags or encase it in glass at a monument have all run into opposition.

"The flag promotes the Confederacy's existence and white supremacy," said Kevin Gray, 43, who heads the Read Street Freedom House Project in Columbia. "Placing the flag on the Statehouse grounds is simply a slap in the face."

Gray said the NAACP's tourism boycott of South Carolina, which officially began Jan. 1, should continue until the flag is out of sight.

"Older black legislators are tired of the fight or believe they need to work in the spirit of comity and civility, that they need to bend over backward for their white colleagues," he said.

But Sen. Robert Ford, a black Democrat who grew up in the shadow of Jim Crow laws, said it is unrealistic to think the flag would be removed from the Statehouse entirely, because the state was the birthplace of the Confederacy.

The "whippersnappers don't know what's going on and don't care," said Sen. Kay Patterson, 69, a black Democrat who has fought to remove the Confederate flag from the Statehouse since he was elected to the House in 1975.

House Minority Leader Gilda Cobb-Hunter, a 48-year-old Democrat who is among the most prominent in the new wave of black leaders in the House, shrugs off Patterson's whippersnapper remark.

Some black legislators' leadership style "is go-along, get-along, as opposed to some whose style is less of a willingness to settle. That one word, 'settle,' describes the difference," Cobb-Hunter said.

New county jail nears completion

By DANEDRI THOMPSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department will be moving to a new home sometime this summer if everything goes as planned with the completion of the Riley County Law Enforcement Center.

"Best estimates are it's going to be finished sometime late summer for people to start working from there. When the official opening will be after that, I can't tell you that," Ed Klimek, Manhattan city commissioner, said.

Klimek said the move will unite patrol and records departments, as well as the investigations department and county jail, at the junction of Seth Childs Road and Kansas Highway 18.

"They're going to be able to perform their duties because they're going to be able to get together and communicate," Klimek said.

He said the police departments are now in separate buildings.

"You've got your uniform officers over at 6th and Colorado, and you've got your detectives and investigators in another building downtown," he said. "That's not a very good situation when you've got your police department broken up in two different places."

The county jail in the new center also will house female inmates, something the old facility couldn't do.

Female inmates and occasionally male prisoners are sent to the Geary County jail at Junction City. The city of Manhattan pays Geary County about $40 per day per female inmate for the jail space.

"We spend a great deal of money sending prisoners to other counties," he said. "That becomes a very expensive process. Plus you have to transport your prisoners back and forth."

JUSTIN HAYWORTH/COLLEGIAN

The new Riley County Law Enforcement Center, at the junction of Seth Childs Road and Kansas Highway 18, should be completed sometime this summer if all goes as planned. The new building will bring together parts of the department now housed in separate buildings.

He said the main reason for shipping prisoners is overcrowding. The present jail was built in 1938 and was intended to hold 19 inmates. It now houses an average of 25-34 prisoners daily.

The city broke ground for the new facility in October 1998. If all goes according to schedule, employees will be turning the key and opening the door of the new building by the end of the summer.

The department also will hire 16 additional employees when the center opens: 10 corrections officers, four corrections supervisors and two communications dispatchers will join the department at different times after the center is complete.

Because the new center will be quite a distance from the courthouse, Klimek said a police substation similar to the substation in Aggieville probably will be placed downtown.

"We haven't really located where that will be, but I think that's going to be necessary to have one for downtown operations," he said. "The court and civil court are in downtown Manhattan, so we'd like to have some sort of substation for officers to make it much more convenient and cost effective."

Lawmakers fail to pass highway legislation

By KELLY WIESE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas highway projects could be trimmed because lawmakers failed to pass a bill that would have allowed the state to spend $55 million in federal funds on construction.

The state's comprehensive transportation plan, enacted last year, counted on getting that money over 10 years. However, the funds depended on passage of legislation to require repeat drunken drivers to use ignition interlock devices.

Because the bill failed, the state still gets the money but must use it instead for safety programs, such as promoting seat belt use.

"It's going to mean a hit to us," said Marty Matthews, spokesman for the Department of Transportation.

KDOT was counting on the money in administering the 10-year, $13.4 billion transportation plan.

"We committed to doing a certain number of projects around the state," Matthews said. "We had a specific pool of money we were counting on. When you take $55 million out of that pool, it leaves you a little short in some places."

He said the department has not determined which projects would be affected.

Under the bill that failed, repeat drunken drivers would have had to use ignition interlock devices, which typically require people to blow into a tube to have their blood-alcohol levels checked. If someone's level is above the legal limit of .08 percent, the device prevents the car from starting.

Requiring ignition interlock use is one of many proposals the federal government has endorsed to curb drunken driving. Federal highway construction money is tied to complying with those measures.

The House approved a compromise version of the ignition interlock bill, 97-26 on Saturday, the last day of the Legislature's session.

However, shortly before legislators adjourned for the year, the Senate rejected the bill, 20-15. The Senate has 40 members, and a bill needs 21 votes to pass.

Rep. Mike O'Neal, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, called the bill's failure a bitter disappointment.

Vrtil, R-Leawood, also said he doesn't like the federal government setting the state's priorities.

"I am growing sick and tired of federal blackmail," he said. "If we use our own independent judgment about what is best for Kansas, the feds don't send us the money."

O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, thought the threat of losing construction funds would give the bill a push.

If the Legislature passes the measure in the future, some of that money could be recovered. But the department is planning for the worst-case scenario.

"We were really hoping to get something done," Matthews said. "It certainly is something that we need to find a solution to."

Senate fails in veto override, waste to remain at plants

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Senate, in yet another struggle over nuclear waste, failed Tuesday to override President Clinton's veto of legislation that would have sent thousands of tons of highly radioactive garbage to Nevada for disposal.

The 64-35 vote fell three senators short of the two-thirds vote needed to pass the measure over the president's objection.

The legislation, which was vetoed by Clinton on March 25, would require that more than 40,000 tons of used reactor fuel, now kept at 72 nuclear power plants in 31 states, begin to be shipped to the Nevada desert 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas beginning in 2007.

The Nevada site is the location of a proposed permanent tomb for nuclear waste under Yucca Mountain. The shipments would have been contingent on the Nuclear Regulatory Commission issuing a license for the permanent facility, which still is undergoing scientific review.

Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., who in the last seconds changed his vote to no for procedural reasons, said he might bring up the measure again. But Nevada's two senators said if he does, they're confident they will again prevail.

Reid and Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., argued that the spent reactor fuel is safe where it is at the reactor sites.

The nuclear industry has argued the government promised to assume responsibility for spent nuclear fuel and that reactor site storage capacity in many cases will run out in the years to come.

team tournament include former Super Bowl Most Valuable Player Doug Williams, New England's Michael Bishop, former Harlem Globetrotter Tony Brown and Kansas City Chief players Warren Moon, Chester McGlockton, Tony Gonzalez, Rashaan Shehee, Tony Richardson and Donnell Bennett.

Blake said money will be raised from the silent auction that will take place May 19 and from businesses that are sponsoring different holes on the course.

He said he hasn't heard whether any of the celebrities will make individual contributions, but said it is a possibility.

Blake said it was a coincidence that the two sponsors came together for this event. Each organization, he said, had approached Colbert Hills about sponsoring tournaments with proposed dates only four days apart.

"They called us and said, 'Hey, this is the situation,' and it worked out," Blake said. "We both wanted to do it."

Whatever the reason, Colley said he is glad.

"We're looking forward to it," Colley said. "We haven't seen it (Colbert Hills) yet, and we're looking forward to seeing the Locketts again."

"They're excellent people to work with."

a student still is uneasy about being identified, they should just refrain from making the comment.

"If a person doesn't feel they can print their response, or doesn't feel comfortable doing it, then they probably shouldn't make them," Clegg said. "I think it's important that the student feels comfortable in giving back feedback, but if they don't, then they probably shouldn't make the comments."

Clegg said unless a department chooses to type the responses, then they are returned to the teachers in their original form. Because of the amount of resources and time required, forms are not typed once they reach Fairchild.

"It would be an extraordinarily long process if we in this department didn't return the exact form to the teachers," she said.

Clegg said the forms are effective in evaluating teachers to an extent, but that they never were meant to be the sole measurement of a faculty or staff member's ability.

"The TEVAL questions were developed initially to be very broad and generic, because they were developed to be used for any class," she said. "Every faculty member has the opportunity to add additional questions. The TEVAL was never created to be the complete evaluation tool."

She said if teachers add questions to the form, it increases their effectiveness. Also, certain departments might require their faculty to administer the evaluations more often than once a year. She said as long as the department and individual meet the university criteria, they can administer however many they want, and in different forms — not just the TEVAL and IDEA forms.

Whether a course is affected by the responses is up to the teacher, she said.

Dan Davy, assistant professor of speech communication, theater and dance, said as a whole he finds the evaluations to be a useful tool, but that they have two large limitations.

When teachers receive the forms, they also receive a sheet that places them in a percentile based on the results of other professors. The results are based on a bell curve, which is where Davy finds a problem.

"It automatically bases everyone as mediocre," he said. "It means that 49 percent are always below average. If you are in the lower half, you will always fail by definition. That's what a bell curve is."

Davy said the bell curve assigns a mean to the faculty and constructively measures them against each other.

"There is something wrong with that system," he said. "I think it is unjust. It intrinsically distorts the faculty."

Ken Brooks, professor of landscape architecture, said the bell curve has a limited scope when it comes to determining the quality of instruction.

"It really doesn't consider much of the circumstance of the course and how it was taught," Brooks said.

He said the bell curving is not a vote, it's a collection of individual reviews.

"That's why the bell curving is not an accurate curving. It is based on numbers and not the validity of the student response," Brooks said.

He said all students do not have the same validity in their answers, and should not be weighted the same. The ones who respond professionally, whether negative or positive, should count for more than those handled unprofessionally.

He said his department types all responses, assuring the anonymity of the students, but that some students take advantage of it and make comments that are unprofessional.

Weighing all student responses equally is the second limitation Davy said the evaluations have. The students who skip class or those who are failing receive the same weight as those who go to class and are obtaining good grades.

"If a student is flunking, chances are they are probably missing class. If that student happens to be there the day TEVALS are given out, then they have the same weight as the student who is there every day. Students with higher grades should be given more weight. Their responses have a more thoughtful, well thought-out opinion than those who are just going with the flow," he said.

Brooks said he thinks the evaluations on a whole have a mixed effect.

"They're depending on the attitude of the students and faculty to use them," he said.

He said in his courses he adds questions to the evaluation because it is limited.

Brooks said the real question pertaining to the teacher evaluations is what are the best ways to get student feedback and to change courses.

"I don't think a quick, anonymous evaluation is going to do that," he said. "A multiple channel of student input is needed."

child's spot," he said.

Payne said the kids named the club.

"They didn't want anything that sounded like a daycare," Payne said.

Payne also offers Summer Safari, a summer day camp. The program allows children to participate in educational and fun activities and field trips in Manhattan and around Kansas.

"We get the kids out and do something fun every day," Payne said.

Kansas City Royals baseball games, the Salina River Festival, the Kansas Cosmosphere, Milford Lake and Oceans of Fun are just a few of the club's past destinations. The group also goes to local businesses.

"We take get-to-know-your-community field trips," Payne said.

Payne said the group is unique to other groups in the area.

"We are a smaller group, so we can travel more," he said. "We are also in an air-conditioned facility."

Sarah Johnston attends the Cool Care Club and the Summer Safari.

"I like it when we go to Mr. Chris' mom's house to go fishing," Sarah, a sixth grade student, said.

Jan Slezinger-Johnston, Sarah's mother, said for Sarah, attending the club is like being at home.

"I don't want her going home alone after school. This is a great facility," Slezinger-Johnston said.

Payne said he recently finished tearing out a wall to install a free-throw basketball game. Students also can play on a computer and a video-game system.

A large shelf with books also keeps students entertained and they can read in the cave, a nook that Payne remodeled. Posters displaying different animals hang around the club.

"The information is here if they want to learn more about them," Payne said. "They are learning and they don't realize it."

Michelle Taylor, senior in psychology, picks up the kids from school and helps with the activities at the club.

Taylor, who said she would like to go into the child psychology field, has worked there for about two and a half years.

"I love the positive reinforcement there, like the bogus bucks. It rewards the kids for good behavior," she said.

Helping students with homework, supervising the chores or helping the kids resolve conflicts are some of Taylor's duties.

"To see the students treat each other with respect and help them succeed is very rewarding," Taylor said.

K-State bans programs used to download music files

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 200 universities have banned the use of Napster and warez, and now of K-State has as well.

Napster, a program used to download and trade MP3 music files, has been slowing university connections and interfering with academic transmissions on the network.

Warez sites, repositories of software made easy to download, have been costing the university money to support as well.

Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology, said in a universitywide e-mail that the programs have been disrupting academic uses for the Internet and have caused interconnection costs to soar.

Many other universities have banned these programs because they slow university connections and increase connection costs.

The K-State student government already has adopted a resolution to restrict irresponsible use of Internet resources, and the university will prohibit the use of Napster and warez programs May 12.

Jake Worcester, student body president, said when the Napster and WAREZ programs are used, they prevent other students from using Internet services for academic purposes.

"It had been a problem because some online classes have been slowed and students have had a hard time getting connected to the Internet," Worcester said.

Worcester said student government is supporting the provost's office in the ban of the programs because it is causing huge difficulties.

"Even though these programs are very popular, they are causing huge problems, and there has to be something done about that," he said. "Just one person using the warez program caused the entire network to go down for an hour."

Jeff Bilberry, junior in mass communications and production director for KSDB-FM 91.9, said the ban on the Napster program will affect them in some ways.

"I know that Napster helped us to find some independent music, and it was a great way for us to find songs that just popped up," Bilberry said.

Bilberry said he understands the ban was necessary because it was clogging university connections, but Napster and warez should not have been banned from all university connections.

"I think it should be kept out of computer labs, but other people should be free to access it," Bilberry said. "I definitely think we should be able to continue using it at the station because it was such a help to us."

Drew Maenche, junior in political science and music director for the Wildcat 91.9, said he does not think the university did the right thing in banning the programs.

"I think that it is a First Amendment violation, in a way," Maenche said. "These programs are not derogatory in any way, and if the university tries to stop us from using them, what else are they going to try and stop us from using?"

Worcester said the Provost office simply has asked students to stop using the programs, via the universi-tywide e-mail, but if students continue to use Napster and warez there might be consequences.

"We want this to be a student-driven issue," Worcester said. "If there are repeat offenders, they will go through the student judicial branch as well as have their computing privileges taken away."

Worcester said the use of these programs has caused such problems because the students who use them do not realize they are causing problems.

"Letting the students know that it is a problem will probably be enough," Worcester said. "But it does have to stop because it has become an academic matter."

Since K-State athletic director Max Urlick announced the addition of women's equestrian to bring the school into compliance with Title IX, funding for the new sport has been a concern. A first-year budget has been set for the team; however, how it will be spent still is undecided.

Fire destroys mobile home storm shelter

By CRISTINA JANNEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residents at Colonial Gardens mobile home park, 3000 Tuttle Creek Blvd., will have to weather the storm season with one less storm shelter because of a fire at the park's office building Wednesday.

Residents will have to use the basement of the community center at the north end of the park for shelter.

That has some people who live on the south part of the park concerned.

Kathy Schmidt, who lives in the park with her husband and two teen-age children, said she was concerned the north shelter was not large enough and would be difficult to get to in the case of an emergency.

"There is one road that goes to that building. Otherwise you have to get on the highway and go down and around," she said.

Schmidt said she usually seeks shelter when the sirens sound.

The shelter closure did not bother others.

Sariah Wilson, senior in elementary education, said she would not be bothered about making her way across the park to the north shelter.

Willard Wells, community manager, said the north shelter in the community building is large enough to accommodate all the residents.

MONEY MATTERS

STORIES BY KELLY EVENSON

Equestrian to use funds for travel, maintaining horses, uniforms

The recent decision by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to add a women's equestrian team as a varsity sport has sparked much debate.

However, Max Urlick, athletic director, said he thinks the K-State community will welcome the idea of the new sport.

"I think, initially, the sport was not welcome because it is not so well-known in this area," Urlick said. "Once the sport becomes more familiar, I think it will become more popular and find an official niche in the athletic department."

Urlick said the initial first-year budget to support the program will be $135,000. He said it has not been identified officially where the money will be spent, but he said he thinks it should go toward travel, uniforms and support services for the team.

Due to a partnership with the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, a new equine Education and Activities Center is a possibility within the next few years, but it will be funded through private donations and not the athletic department.

Teresa Douthitt, coach for the equestrian team, also said some of the money will go to the cost of travel to competitions, and also to maintaining the horses. She said this maintenance will include things such as feeding and vaccinations. None of the funding will go toward purchasing or transporting horses to competitions, because the host school donates the horses for competition.

"When the initial announcement was made, I was surprised," Douthitt said. "Of course, some people are not in favor of it, but since the announcement was officially made, I have been flooded with people who are interested and in support of the team."

Urlick said during the next three to four years, the amount of the equestrian team's budget will be increased to where it eventually will be at a competitive balance with other schools. With the slight increase in 2000 student football tickets and some successful fundraisers, he said the money became available.

"It was just a matter of taking funds from available resources," Urlick said. "This is a new experience for K-State and for everyone who will be involved."

Douthitt said previous funding for the team primarily came from fundraisers and donations. She said the Kansas Quarterhorse Association has been a huge supporter in the past, and private clinics also have

Students debate decision over new women's sport

Soccer, softball, swimming and diving, and equestrian. The choice of which sport to add in order to become compliant with Title IX was left up to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The decision was to add women's equestrian to Wildcat athletics, and since the announcement was made, students have been debating if the choice was correct.

Aaron Schwabauer, junior in education, said he does not have a problem with the new women's sport. He said, however, if the university had decided to add a more well-known sport such as softball or soccer, the decision might have been more popular among students.

"I think an equestrian team is all right," Schwabauer said. "However, if it had been softball or soccer, it might have appealed to more of the students and the community."

Charges against K-State football player dismissed

By BROOKE ERICKSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Charges have been dropped against K-State offensive lineman Thomas Barnett after he was arrested for kidnapping and making criminal threats to former K-State running back Leon Edwards in March this year.

Edwards failed to appear in court Tuesday, dismissing all charges against Barnett.

The preliminary hearing was to be at 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Barnett was arrested March 3 after he allegedly kidnapped Edwards and drove him from Manhattan to Wichita to reclaim a shotgun Edwards had won in a bet.

Barry Wilkerson, assistant county attorney, said he didn't know why Edwards failed to appear in court.

Topeka man suffers injuries in motorcycle, truck collision on Anderson Avenue

■ Motorcyclist treated for slight injuries; driver of truck receives no injuries.

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was treated for left arm and leg injuries at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue after he was struck by an oncoming truck Wednesday night, authorities said.

Roger Haden, of Topeka, was driving a motorcycle when he was hit head-on by James Hardy, Riley, Kan., who was attempting to make a left turn at the intersection of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue at 6:35 p.m., said Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department.

Evan J. Tier, bystander, said two motorcycles were driving down the street while the truck was driving in the opposite direction.

One motorcycle swerved out of the way, but one didn't make it in time and flipped over the top of the truck.

They both were wearing helmets, Tier said. Police were on the scene directing traffic for about an hour.

Chris Jadwin, bystander, was about 100 feet away and said he could hear the impact of the crash.

"I was way at the top of the hill, and I could hear everything,"

he said.

No citations have been issued to either party, and the accident still is being investigated, Moldrup said.

It is unknown at this time who was at fault, he said.

Haden is in good condition and probably will stay overnight at the hospital. Bill Matthews, a friend of his, said.

Matthews said Haden broke his left wrist and had several scratches, but other than that, he was OK. The surgeon most likely was going to operate on his wrist immediately, he said.

Hardy received no injuries and could not be reached for comment.

Topeka resident Diana Haden and Riley County Police Department officials examine the damage after the motorcycle of her husband, Roger Haden, was hit head-on by a truck driven by James Hardy of Riley, Kan. No citations have been issued to either party involved.

Arkansas executes woman, 1st in more than 150 years

VARNER, Ark. — A former nurse who asked for the death penalty for drugging and suffocating her two children was executed by injection Tuesday in Arkansas' first execution of a woman in more than 150 years.

Christina Marie Riggs, 28, was the fifth woman executed in the United States since the Supreme Court lifted a ban on capital punishment in 1976.

She had maintained throughout that she wanted to die, and her last words reflected her grief.

"There is no way no words can express how sorry I am for taking the lives of my babies," she said. "Now I can be with my babies, as I always intended." She had withdrawn all appeals and chose not to seek clemency from Gov. Mike Huckabee.

Riggs told authorities that she intended to use potassium chloride — the same heart-stopping drug used in executions — to kill her children, 5-year-old Justin and 2-year-old Shelby Alexis, in 1997.

She gave the children an antidepressant in hopes it would make them drowsy, then injected Justin with the potassium chloride but did not administer it properly.

When Justin began crying, Riggs told police, she injected him with morphine left over from a hospital patient and smothered both children. Riggs then took 28 antidepressant tablets, intending to commit suicide.

The children were found dead in Riggs' bed. Riggs was found on the floor.

Initially, Riggs' mother and lawyer said she suffered post-traumatic stress after working as a nurse in the aftermath of the Oklahoma City bombing. The matter soon was dropped and never came up at her trial.

Riggs worked at the Veterans Administration hospital in Oklahoma City from 1990 to July 1995, but the hospital said she was not sent to the scene of the April 1995 bombing. She later worked at the Arkansas Heart Hospital.

Riggs pleaded with the jury in 1998 to give her the death penalty, saying: "I want to be with my babies."

Prosecutors told jurors that Riggs' children had become an inconvenience to her. They said she left the children by themselves while she competed in karaoke contests and had plotted their deaths for weeks.

The last woman executed in Arkansas was Lavinia Burnett, hanged in 1845 for being an accessory to murder.

Nationally, the first woman executed since 1976 was Velma Barfield, who died by injection in North Carolina in 1984 for poisoning her boyfriend. The most recent was Betty Lou Beets, put to death in Texas in February for murdering her fifth husband.

Stovall discusses reasons for most juvenile violence

TOPEKA — Poor home lives and harassment by peers are the two chief contributors to violence among juveniles, Attorney General Carla Stovall said Wednesday.

Stovall spoke to about 400 people at the First Annual Governor's Conference on Juvenile Justice.

She based her assessment of the contributing factors of violence on the results of a recent study by the National Association of Attorneys General.

"What we heard in Kansas mirrors what attorneys general heard around the country," Stovall said.

Stovall said youths don't have enough adult supervision, particularly between 3 and 7 p.m.

"That's when it is that kids tend to be unsupervised and engaging in risky behavior," she said.

Stovall also said bullying and disrespect from other youths triggers violence.

"We have to understand what it is that our kids are enduring," Stovall said. "For some children, an errant baseball through a picture window is much less common than an errant bullet through a bedroom wall."

Before Stovall's speech, Gov. Bill Graves said his goals for the final two years of his term include funding successful juvenile justice programs, respecting local control over such programs and expanding youth lockups.

Graves praised a $60 million building project for lockups that legislators approved last week.

"I have to tell you how proud I am that we have committed to the first major construction initiative for juvenile justice in Kansas in a century," Graves said.

'Millionaire' celebrities.
 NEW YORK — Do Drew Carey and Rosie O'Donnell sweat like regular folks when confronted with big-money questions on "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?"

Maybe not, though Carey admitted he was nervous. What was more important to ABC was the record-breaking number of people watching this week to see how celebrities perform in the hot seat.

Monday's first celebrity edition of "Millionaire" drew 35.8 million viewers, the most ever to watch the game show, even though 3.5 million Time Warner subscribers were unable to get it on cable because of the company's dispute with ABC.

Indications from sample markets are that Tuesday's edition did even better, though final Nielsen Media Research numbers weren't in. For the first time, "Millionaire" had more viewers than all of the competing shows on CBS, NBC, Fox, UPN and the WB combined, said Marc Berman, an analyst for Mediaweek.com. "The show is unbelievable," Berman said.

Carey was the big winner the first two nights, earning $500,000 for his charity, the Ohio Library Foundation. He declined a chance to risk his winnings on the $1 million question: Which football star was the first to film a commercial for Disney World? The answer: Phil Simms.

Actor David Duchovny blew his chance to win $500,000 the night before by missing a movie question, and was knocked down to $32,000. Each of the celebrities appearing is guaranteed at least $32,000 in winnings for charity.

O'Donnell, the show's most vocal celebrity backer, gives Carey a run for his money on Wednesday's edition.

Surfing the wave of popularity, ABC scheduled 17 nights of "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?" for the 24 nights in May's ratings sweeps. This week it added No. 18, a special behind-the-scenes peek at making the show, and audaciously scheduled it for May 18 opposite the season finale of "ER."

When first approached about doing a celebrity "Millionaire" series, executive producer Michael Davies questioned whether it would work. He believes one reason the show is so appealing is the notion that any average American could win.

Davies went ahead with the celebrities because, with the show on at least three nights a week, he needed something to keep things fresh.

"What was very clear when we started to book the show was the enthusiasm the celebrities that said yes had for the program," he said. "I knew that enthusiasm would be infectious."

Kansas House majority leader runs for speaker

By CARL MANNING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — House Majority Leader Kent Glasscock on Wednesday became the first candidate to announce for the chamber's top leadership post of speaker next year.

Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said one of his goals would be to unite conservative and moderate Republicans in the chamber.

"The conservatives need to be treated fairly and with respect. I've done that and I will continue to do so," he said. "They are an important part of the caucus."

"I want to do everything in my power to bring the party together. Republicans need to hear diverse voices, reach a consensus and work together," Glasscock added.

Glasscock, 47, is serving his fifth term in the House, and was elected majority leader for the 1999 and 2000 sessions. Republicans have a 77-48 majority in the House.

His announcement came two days after Speaker Robin Jennison, R-Healy, said he was retiring and starting a company to promote hunting in Kansas.

Nobody else has announced for speaker, and some legislators say Glasscock might run unopposed.

"I think Kent will be the only one. A real consensus has built for him," said Speaker Pro Tem Doug Mays, R-Topeka.

But Glasscock discounted that notion, saying, "I've never seen an open seat for the speakership that wasn't contested."

Rep. Tony Powell, a leading conservative Republican, said Glasscock appears the favorite to win but also said he will need conservative support.

"It depends on whether the conservatives are brought in as part of the leadership. It is imperative that conservatives have a voice in the running of the House and our caucus," said Powell, of Wichita.

Mays said he's looking very strongly at running for majority leader, considered the chamber's No. 2 leadership position.

If Mays runs for majority leader, he will face at least Assistant Majority Leader Shari Weber, R-Herington, who says she will run.

The House elects its speaker the first day it convenes in January in odd-numbered years, but the minority party traditionally ratifies the majority party's choice during a December meeting.

Glasscock is married to Gov. Bill Graves' chief of staff, Joyce Glasscock. Both men said that wouldn't give either an inside track.

"Both the governor and I understand the separation of powers," Glasscock said, adding he would side with the House against Graves if necessary.

For his part, Graves said, "Kent is a great friend of mine, someone that I think has demonstrated great leadership skills and has been a great asset to me."

But he said, "I got more work out of Kent and more assistance when he was not in a leadership role."

Glasscock said his first task is to win re-election. He said several years ago a Manhattan lawmaker was considered the next speaker, but was turned out by voters.

"And I haven't forgotten that," Glasscock said.

May Day Baskets

bring cheer to St. Joseph Senior Community

■ Human Development students donate time, gifts to senior citizens.

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

May Day came a little late for residents at the St. Joseph Senior Community.

But the response still was the same.

"That's a lovely idea," resident Eleanor White said as students from K-State's Introduction to Human Development class gave her a May Day basket and told her their class was bringing each resident a basket.

Kelly Theonnes, graduate student in human ecology and Human Development lab teacher, said this was the final lab for the class.

"We wanted them to get experience talking with the elderly," she said.

Michelle Eaton, graduate student in family studies and human services and Human Development lab teacher, said bringing baskets to the residents is a tradition that started last semester when the class took holiday baskets to the residents.

"We really had a good time," she said. "Hopefully, we'll be doing it from now on."

The students in the class get together in groups and use their own money to prepare the baskets for the residents, Eaton said.

"They really enjoyed our baskets," she said. "And we had enough baskets for everyone to have one."

Eaton said this lab project is more practical to real life.

Michelle Williams, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, took a May Day basket to White. When Williams told her what class she was doing this for, White had a quick response.

"I didn't know humans had to develop anymore," she said.

St. Joseph is located on Kimball Avenue near KSU Stadium, and

"It's rewarding to know you did something for someone, and you probably brightened their day," L'Ecuier said. LEFT: This is the May Day basket Michelle Williams, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, and Ben Schultz, freshman in business, prepared for Eleanor White.

White said she see a lot of tailgaters during football season.

"Oh Lord, yes," she said. "I couldn't believe how kids get so darned worked up over a football game."

Another resident looked like she was ready to go to a football game. Decked out in K-State purple, Billie DeLong was happy to receive a May Day basket.

"This is all mine," she said as the group of Ashlee Hunter, Jacque Davis, Kristen L'Ecuier and Katerina Chuda handed her the basket.

All four women said they enjoyed what they were doing.

"It's a way to give back and to interact with people who probably don't get very many visitors," L'Ecuier, junior in dietetics, said.

"It's rewarding to know you did something for someone, and you probably brightened their day."

Hunter, senior in speech, said the lab project is beneficial for both the residents and the students.

"It's good for them, definitely," she said. "It makes you humble."

Maggie Grusznis, sophomore in human ecology and mass communications, said visiting with residents at St.

Joseph was a good class project because it confirmed a lot of what they were learning in class.

She visited with St. Joseph resident Lucretia Bitterman, who told her about living in Chicago. Bitterman said she didn't really like being at St. Joseph, but she knew she had to be.

"I never thought I'd be all alone like this," she said.

Bitterman said she had a niece and nephew who visited sometimes, but that was it.

Grusznis said she thought Bitterman and the other residents really enjoyed the new visitors.

"I think it brightened up their day," she said. "It made the day a little different for them."

Teachers should follow dead-week policy

Someone needs to kill dead week.

The one week of school students are supposed to have for themselves, to prepare for finals, graduation, jobs, internships or just to have a break from school is referred to as dead week. Tests and assignments are supposed to be nonexistent.

This is not always the case. Some teachers schedule quizzes, exams or tests for the week. Many more set deadlines during the week.

Both are counterintuitive actions.

After a hectic semester of school work, students often are hit with the realization summer is almost upon them. Dead week is supposed to provide them an opportunity to complete many of the tasks they have neglected all semester for the sake of school work.

For many, it fails to do so. Rather than spending their time preparing for the not-so-distant future, students spend the week completing assignments that have been on the syllabus since January but they only recently received the information or knowledge to complete.

Although the university frowns on the administration of tests during dead week, having assignments due during that time period is acceptable.

To aid students' educational advancement and career opportunities, the university should consider changing this stance.

Assignments should not be made due during dead week. This time should be reserved for students.

Dead week is students' final chance before the semester culminates in finals. In addition, it is their last chance to secure summer employment, housing or other details.

K-State should heed student needs and put dead week out of our misery.

► OUR VIEW an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Collegian's Reader Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on any topic for 20 seconds.

Hey, Richard Smith, did you doubt Michael Vick of Virginia Tech, too, or was he just a fluke of nature?

I hope not every liberal has the same opinion as David Levin — or this country's going to hell.

The Collegian is filled with a bunch of morons.

Attendance at the Marvelous 3 concert was pathetic. UPC did its job to get them here. Now, why don't K-State students support campus events?

Capri pants: a good example of someone who didn't measure twice.

Jeff: If you want to reach out and touch someone next semester, just call the Forum. You know how that goes.

When they don't turn on the A.C., it means, "Don't come back and live here next year."

K-State needs diversity. Jeff Elliott was diverse for 14 weeks. Thank you, Jeff.

Hi, this is Jeremietrus Fushnickens. He's been trying to force his opinions on me for a long time.

I may not have solved the parking problem, but I did put 400 miles on my bicycle this year.

That column in the Collegian today was awful about Colbert Hills. It is ridiculous to think that golf course was built for college kids when it was designed by Jim Colbert. It was built for the Kansas State golf team, and it is one of the top facilities in the country.

There's two things the world can do without: chastity belts and capri pants.

Does anybody have a kegorator for sale?

It's a bird. It's a plane. No, wait. It's a junebug.

Was school so boring on Tuesday that we had to have a turtle on the front page of Wednesday's Collegian?

THANK YOU

Graduating columnist expresses gratitude to those who helped

'Tis the end of the year, and my heart is overflowing with thanks.

So, some of the many people I care about — in condensed form — I want to say thank you to:

Professors

You spent many hours pouring over not only your research but also your lesson plans. You taught us some valuable lessons about the world around us.

Bike police

You worked so hard at keeping our sidewalks safe. We feel better because of you.

Financial aid

The only reason I am here is because you give me money. Without you, I would be saying something like, "Welcome to (insert burger joint), may I take your order?"

Lafene Health Center

Thanks for making me healthy.

K-State Student Union administration

Because of your care, we have been able to keep the Union open to the public while it is turned into a mall.

Campus Fourum

You make it possible for people to say what they want without having to be held accountable. Thanks for letting us pass the buck.

President Jon Wefald

Thank you for creating an instant rivalry with the entire state of Texas instead of waiting for Student Governing Association to declare them our rivals.

Dean of Student Life

Pat Bosco

Thanks for increasing the student enrollment rate and making it possible for my unmarried friends to get decent dates.

Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

We've reached a new level in the types of sports bra fashions seen within your walls.

Facilities employees

You keep our dirt full of colorful and beautiful flowers. You make our days bright with spring.

Willie the Wildcat

Thanks for doing more pushups this year than a soldier at boot camp.

Call Hall

Thanks for keeping us full of tons of flavors of ice cream for cheap.

Pepsi Cola

Thanks for giving us something to drink, even though it breaks the bank.

Parking Services

Thanks for encouraging us to wake up earlier, even if it is to fill our time looking for an elusive spot.

K-State football

Thanks for all the great times you gave us on Saturdays. After Spring Game, we know we have much to look forward to next year.

Students

Thanks for making class fun and interesting. Without all of you, I would have to answer all the questions.

City of Manhattan

You didn't complain at all when your streets filled to capacity — except for those with a roundabout in the center.

KSU Alumni Association

Thanks for raising funds to give some of us scholarships and for giving us great fans on the other side of the stadium.

Olga Firsova

Thanks for making us proud by going to the WNBA. It's nice to see our basketball team successful.

Finally, a big thanks to my friends and family. You have been an everlasting support in my life. You truly are the greatest.

KELLIE FARRELL/COLLEGIAN

Great truth can be found in books

I had an epiphany last weekend. I love having epiphanies. I love the feeling of sudden insight into the essential meaning of some truth or aspect of reality.

It is like an orgasm of the mind.

Mind you, it is not as good as a real orgasm, but it definitely is better than chocolate.

This epiphany occurred while I was in the act of one of my three regular recreational activities: reading. That is one of the reasons I enjoy reading so much; it is very conducive to epiphanies, and since I broke up with my last girlfriend, a mental orgasm is better than no orgasm at all.

This is not to say I don't have epiphanies during times spent doing my other two regular recreational activities: drinking beer and shooting pool while drinking beer, but the epiphanies don't come as often.

Moreover, drinking beer and shooting pool while drinking beer is not conducive to remembering epiphanies after they occur.

In this aspect, having a drunken epiphany is better than having drunken sex — at least you don't wake up next to some stranger. It's usually not until I go out again to drink more beer or shoot more pool while drinking beer that I even remember that I had an epiphany in the first place. I'll be approached by an acquaintance who will ask if I wrote that column on that great idea I had the last time I was out drinking, to which I'll respond, "Which great idea was that?" only to concur that neither of us remember what the great idea was in the first place.

Sometimes, while I'm out drinking beer and/or shooting pool and having epiphanies, I remember I always carry a pen.

VIEWPOINT

DAVID LEVIN

I jot down my intuitive perceptions, only to find them the next time I'm at the laundromat checking my pockets. It is then I realize my beer-drinking epiphanies not only are unintuitive and unperceptive, but also incoherent.

I'll pull out a napkin or beer coaster with such scribbles as, "It's the brick and mortar that makes the wheels swim," with lots of stars around, arrows pointing at, and the words "IMPORTANT IDEA" written above it.

This sober epiphany I had last weekend came to me while reading John Steinbeck's "Sweet Thursday," which is the sequel to one of my all-time favorite books, "Cannery Row." The main character of these books is the community of people that lives on Cannery Row, the location in Monterey, Calif., where all the fish canneries are.

Except for Doc, a naturalist who collects stray cats and ocean organisms to sell to various schools across the nation for biology classes, most of the stories' characters are vagrants and drunks, whores and thieves, swindlers and con artists — people living on the margins of society.

Yet these characters will have it no other way, and for the most part, are content with their lives. Though these characters are not the most virtuous, they all are portrayed by Steinbeck in detached beauty.

At first, I thought the narratives were like an episode of Seinfeld; stories about nothing except life itself, but unlike Seinfeld, Steinbeck's characters aren't ugly and they all care for and love each other.

But it was when I was halfway through "Sweet Thursday" that I realized the stories really are about the fact that goodness and happiness only can occur within the ties all humans share. I had long known one cannot behave immorally if there's no one about.

Evil cannot exist on an island with one person. It never occurred to me that goodness also cannot occur in isolation.

Many people have said to me that while they love individuals, they hate humanity. But I'm the opposite. There might exist a few individuals who crap up the world for the rest of us, but humanity as a whole is beautiful, for out of humanity comes appreciation, and from appreciation comes love, and there's nothing more important than love.

That's about what Steinbeck wrote so eloquently, and why he was such an important writer.

It's interesting how great truths are often found in the works of great fiction.

READERS write

Political science students, graduates show gratitude to department head

Editor,

As we approach the closing of another academic year at K-State, we reflect upon those who have had a great effect on our lives.

For each of us, there are many who come to mind, but there is one person we all would like to thank, Dale Herspring.

Herspring is the head of the Department of Political Science, but he goes beyond this role to help students. Herspring will bend over backwards to help any student who asks for assistance. Many of us could not have competed in or won national scholarships and fellowships with out the continuous assistance of Herspring.

He is generous with his time in helping students complete scholarship and college applications, even during his free time over holidays. Some of us have spent winter break working on applications, and others have spent spring break working on essays with him. He has been there for all of us on more than one occasion.

During these times, he often reads the same applications and essays several times a week just to assure us we had written our best. He has even brought applications home to brainstorm possible interview questions that would help us better prepare.

Herspring is known for his ability to grill potential candidates for various interviews and applications. These were perhaps the times when we learned the most about our interests, our career goals and ourselves.

Some of us won scholarships or places in top graduate schools and some of us did not. But Herspring did not care if we won or lost, because he knew we had potential and he cares about us as individuals, not as achievements.

Whether we won or not, we all received recognition for our efforts — yet his endless hours of help often have gone unnoticed.

Herspring is not just a mentor but also a friend. He takes a personal interest in our lives. He has supported us through life's disappointments and successes. He always offers a listening ear, advice and help any way he can.

Furthermore, he continues to help us once we leave K-State. He keeps in contact as an adviser and helps us continue toward success with fellowships, internships, jobs and acceptance into prestigious graduate schools. He keeps in contact as a friend who is concerned with our families, everyday life and us.

Many of us do not call Manhattan home, but he makes us feel like it is a home where we are always welcome.

We, the undersigned, would like to recognize Herspring for his undying commitment and thank him for his continuous support. For us and many others, he has gone above and beyond the call of a department head to help with the development of future leaders who have and will continue to make K-State and the state of Kansas proud.

Thank you, Dr. Herspring.

Diversity Dialogue addresses questions regarding feminism

By TAMARA MANN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Addressing and defining feminism was the central focus of the Diversity Dialogue on Wednesday.

LaFayette Childs II, sophomore in environmental design, posed questions to those attending about the definition of woman and feminism.

Childs said he originally thought feminism meant that women thought they were better than him. He said after getting older he realized it's not that they were saying they were better, but rather they were saying, "I am equal."

Women want to receive the same respect as anyone else, not be shoved down, he said.

Latasha Reed, Diversity Dialogue facilitator and sophomore in biology, voiced her opinion about the different terms being discussed.

"In my opinion, being a woman is just being who you are — being a person," Reed said. "A concrete definition of feminism to me would be simply viewing women as equal members of society who are just as valuable as the next."

"Feminists are just individuals taking steps in the right track to educate others to understand what feminism is. Often they receive a lot of opposition because things sometimes go against societal norms."

Angie Turner, sophomore in biology and participant in the dialogue, said she didn't realize feminism was an issue until recently.

"Feminism has never even crossed my mind before. Part of the reason may be because I haven't ran into that wall yet or ever been shut down by it before," Turner said.

Turner said since she has realized feminism is an issue, she has noticed it is addressed in movies and in daily life more often.

"I recently saw 'Erin Brockovich,' with actress Julia Roberts," Turner said. "It's a great movie that addresses feminism. It portrays a poor, somewhat provocative woman who succeeds in the business world, while the male stays home with the kids."

Gender equity also was an issue touched upon at the dialogue.

Candi Pitts, academic counselor at the Academic Assistance Center and former kindergarten teacher, said gender equity issues begin at an early age.

"I used to teach kindergarten, and when I'd asked my students to tell me what was important, you could already see some of the gender equity issues forming," she said. "Little girls at this age already thought some of the most important things were to be pretty, liked and et cetera."

"We need to start focusing on lifting everyone's self esteem because that's something no one can take away from you."

EVAN SEMON/COLLEGIAN

LaFayette Childs II, sophomore in environmental design, posed questions to those attending concerning the definition of a woman and feminism. He said he realized it's not that women say they are better, but rather that they wish to be viewed as equal.

Fort Riley artillery practice raises questions from local residents

By CHRISTIE VANOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Fort Riley rolls out its heavy artillery, its surrounding communities feel the effects.

Doug Eckstrom, who has lived in the Manhattan area for nearly 15 years, said there are times when the noise from Fort Riley training exercises is annoying, but he said the training is a necessary evil.

"Everybody always has to find something to complain about," Eckstrom, senior in architectural engineering, said. "We're talking about national defense. It has to be located somewhere," he said. "It just happens to be our next door neighbor."

Maj. Michael Miller, chief of training, said Fort Riley is equipped with two deployable brigade combat teams that consist of infantry, armor, artillery, engineer and air defense soldiers.

"We want the soldiers to be prepared for combat," Miller said. "For them to be able to do their job to protect the nation, they've got to train with the weapons they would use in combat."

The weapons that generate the most noise typically are Bradleys and tanks, but demolitions carried out by the engineers have an effect as well, he said.

"There are restrictions on the amount of explosives that we can use," Miller said, "and they are related to the amount of noise that goes off post."

Besides the force created by the weapons, other aspects play a factor in the amount of noise that reaches Manhattan and surrounding cities.

"People, especially in Keats and Manhattan, live in what's called an acoustic valley, and Military personnel say training is necessary part of national defense depending on the weather and climatic conditions, sometimes that, in effect, amplifies the noise," said Scott Price, community relations officer at Fort Riley.

In addition to other responsibilities, Price has the task of handling noise complaints for the installation.

"My job is basically to explain to people what's going on, why we're firing, what the consequences are if we don't and when it's going to stop," he said.

Price said he deals with a variety of people.

Some just want it on record that their windows were shaking in case of damage and others who respond with profanity.

For the people reporting damage, Price said he immediately forwards the complaint to Fort Riley's Staff Judge Advocate Claims Department.

"They conduct an investigation, and in my experience if there is damage caused by vibrations, in the past, they have, in effect, settled claims," he said.

Steve Jankord, Manhattan Area Builders Association president and owner of Jankord Construction, has been building and remodeling homes in the area for 15 years and said settling is natural with any type of construction.

"I'm living in a 30-year-old house, and I have to go through and straighten pictures and adjust stuff on my shelves," he said. "It's just part of living near a military installation. You can't ask them to stop training," he said.

Fort Riley does make an effort to minimize the amount of noise and vibration caused by live-fire training by using simulators, Miller said.

Soldiers do everything in simulation beforehand to make sure that they're proficient, so when they actually go to the range, it minimizes the time that they're out there, Miller said.

Another complaint frequently received is the time of day that the abrupt booms occur.

"One of the greatest advantages that we have over most of our opponents in the world is our night-vision capability," Miller said.

"Our night-vision technology gives us an advantage over the enemy, so you want to train to use that technology, and the only way to do that is at night."

Despite the series of booms that sometimes last hours, Fort Riley has a post-imposed policy preventing tanks from firing from midnight Saturday to noon Sunday. It abates the noise a little bit on weekends and for Sunday morning service, Miller said.

The policy, however, only applies to active duty units. Therefore, when the Kansas National Guard uses Fort Riley's ranges to train on weekends, they might shoot during those times.

"One thing people need to remember is Fort Riley has been here since 1852 and when cannons fire and flares go up in the night, that's really the sound and dynamics of freedom," Price said.

Don't forget to check out the last Collegian of the semester on Friday.

Cats SHOCK Shockers

K-State offense unloads on Wichita State, 18-6

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WICHITA — The loudest cries came from the home-team Wichita State baseball fans in the fifth inning Wednesday night when Wildcats' center fielder Joey Ammirato flied out to right field.

The reason? Ammirato was the first out in the fifth inning as well as the ninth batter of the inning — a scenario that was frequent for the Cats in their 18-6 victory over the Shockers.

K-State (18-27) ended a seven-game losing streak to Wichita State (32-16) that dates back to May 1997 by not wasting opportunities to score, something the Cats did in Tuesday's 7-2 loss to the Shockers.

"The kids were ready to play," head coach Mike Clark said.

"I got on 'em after the game yesterday after the way everything finished. I really challenged them."

K-State responded with its largest offensive output since beating Howard 24-4 in mid-April. Fueled by seven walks and seven K-State batters being hit by pitch-

"We were a lot more patient today and really did a nice job. We got rewarded for it."

Mike Clark

es, including a school-record four in the fifth inning, the Wildcats were able to capitalize on Shocker mistakes — only 12 of the Cats' 18 runs were earned.

The Wildcats also received a stellar performance from junior pitcher Scott Tallman (1-2), who was making just his third start of the season.

The southpaw had a one-hitter through five innings before finally cracking and allowing three runs in the sixth and seventh innings.

The Wildcats got on the board early and often, scoring two in the first inning when junior first baseman Mark English slammed his ninth home run of the season into the left field seats.

K-State added one run in the third before opening the game in the fourth by scoring seven runs.

Senior second baseman Chad Tabor led the way, with a three-run blast over for his second home run of the year.

The Cats improved in the fifth, scoring eight runs, while sending 13 men to the plate.

Only four of those batters actually got hits, with the rest either being hit by a pitch, walking or recording an out.

For the evening, K-State pounded out 12 hits, led by freshman designated hitter Pat Maloney, junior catcher Nick Scelfo and Tabor, who had two hits apiece. Tabor led the way with five RBI, while Maloney, English and junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger each knocked in three runs.

For Clark, the Cats' success at the plate all comes down to one thing.

"We were a lot more patient today and really did a nice job," Clark said. "We got rewarded for it."

K-State's Chad Tabor meets teammates J.D. Loudabarger and Pat Maloney in the fourth inning after hitting a three-run home run. The Wildcats routed the Wichita State Shockers 18-6 on Wednesday in Wichita.

Player finds success in hometown play

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WICHITA — K-State's 18-6 win over Wichita State University was more than a just victory for a struggling Wildcat program for second baseman Chad Tabor.

It was the Wichita native's final collegiate return to his hometown and his first win over the Shockers at Eck Stadium in his four-year K-State playing career.

"It was really nice to come in, especially being the last time I'll ever play in Wichita and getting a win like this," Tabor said, "and to have the game I did, it felt really good."

That game included a 2-for-4 performance from the plate, with two runs scored and five RBI, breaking his career record of four RBI against Oklahoma State in 1998.

Teachers, students play ball

By JEFF CALDWELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The NCAA basketball season might be over, but basketball in the college ranks continues.

At least, for a group of K-State professors, retired and active, and other Manhattan residents who gather every weekday during their lunch hours in Ahearn Field House to do what they love — play basketball.

Each day, from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., about 30 men, including Manhattan City Commissioner Bruce Sneed, gather at the basketball courts in Ahearn and play a number of full-court pick-up games on three courts. The players range in age from late 20s and early 30s to retired professors in their 70s.

Among those who play in the games and are active professors at K-State is Larry Rodgers, head of the Department of English. Not as experienced in these games as many other participants, Rodgers said he has played for about 10 years. He emphasized the good nature of the games and said that winning wasn't always a top priority.

"It would be tough to find five guys who would play defense," Rodgers said.

The lunch-hour games are structured so the level of play can be consistent. One way this is done is by making the defense responsible for calling fouls during the game.

"By the defense calling the fouls, we eliminate the fighting and bickering, plus we get to stay on the floor and play longer," Ron Lackey, player and Manhattan resident, said.

Lackey said many of the men who play, even though they are older, still "have game."

During the preparation for the games, some players set the good-natured tone by "trash-talking" their fellow players. Lynn Rundle, Manhattan resident, proclaimed himself to be a member of the "All-Trash-Talking Team."

"I can talk trash with the best of them," he said.

Once the games begin, however, the competitive side of each player starts to show up. Players participate in antics off-the-court like yelling, both at themselves and others, during the full-court action.

Even though the level of intensity does pick up during play, the players are playing for their enjoyment, as exemplified by Rodgers, who cited illegal hustle for the reason his opponents scored.

As the games progress, the intensity that had been evident throughout picks up toward the end.

The seemingly playful nature of some players was transformed into a sense of competitiveness that is evidence they still have a hunger

Jesse Bauman, freshman in mechanical engineering and novice rower, is faster on the rowing machines than any other rower on the team at this time. Unfortunately for K-State, Bauman and his talent might be better served at another university such as California or Brown University, his varsity coach said.

K-State novice rower aspires to break in to national, world competitions

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only nine months ago, freshman Jesse Bauman was just another student at K-State — and then he joined the men's rowing team.

Now, elite rowing universities soon will be knocking on his door, and even dreams of the Olympics are beginning to appear in his horizon.

Needless to say, Bauman, a native of Quinter, Kan., has changed his plans somewhat from when he first arrived in Manhattan last fall.

"Up until two months ago, I never thought of transferring. I planned to get an internship," Bauman said. "Now, people tell me that I can make the Olympics if I work hard enough."

"Five or six months ago, if you'd told me that I'd have a shot at the Olympics in four years, I would have been like, 'no way.'"

These grand rowing plans stem from his prodigious talent and 6-foot-4-inch, 205 pound frame. Bauman, a novice rower, is faster on the rowing machines than any other rower on the team, varsity rowers included.

"Jesse probably has the highest potential to be successful at the next level that we've ever had in our program," Varsity Coach Seji Ikeda said. "Jesse is by far the strongest person that we have ever had on our rowing team, and with a careful investment in him, we can transfer that power to boat speed."

Bauman's potential is not only due to his size and strength, though, Ikeda said.

"It's his personality," Ikeda said. "He's very humble, a very great guy to get to know. All the rowers enjoy having him around. He's a team player, and that's the strongest quality that's going to help him to achieve his goals."

Unfortunately for K-State, Bauman and his talent might be served better at a university such as California or Brown University, Ikeda said.

"Jesse's talents, we would definitely like to have out here in this program, but probably it is in his best interest to go to a program with a better rowing program," Ikeda said.

From there, Bauman could be on to even bigger and better places. He already has tried to try out for the team, but narrowly missed the opportunity, Bauman said.

"I missed an ID camp. That's when you go row, get identified and get your name out," Bauman said. "But the standard to get in was higher than usual since it was an Olympic year, and I missed it by seven seconds. From the camp, they chose the Olympic athletes. So, I'm close."

"I have high hopes. I want to make it on the national team next summer."

As close as Bauman is to breaking onto the national rowing scene, his decision to even give rowing a try last fall was due mostly to circumstance, Bauman said.

"One of my uncles knows a girl on the rowing team," Bauman said. "I had thought about walking on for the football team and joined the rowing team to keep in shape."

A three-sport athlete in high school, Bauman had the physical potential to do well in rowing, but his success still came as a surprise, he said.

"When I first did my first test on the rowing machines, the coach told me about it, and I was like, 'no way,'" Bauman said.

Success aside, however, rowing has been an overall great experience, Bauman said.

"I loved it. The guys are a lot of fun," Bauman said. "It's not as serious as football, but it keeps you in shape. If a guy has endurance, he should try it out."

It is something that Bauman said he is glad he did.

"If I wouldn't have tried out, I wouldn't have found out I had a talent for it," Bauman said. "You never know until you try."

Rowing Results

The men's rowing team wrapped up its season last weekend at The Great Plains Rowing Championships at Lake Shawnee in Topeka. Both the varsity and novice teams had good performances at the regatta. The results were as follows:

- Men's Novice Four-400 meters
1st: K-State "A" (1:15.3) 2nd: Colorado "A" (1:15.9)
- Men's Novice Four-2000 meters
1st: K-State (6:51.4) 2nd: Colorado (7:01.5)
- Men's Open Varsity Four-2000 meters
1st: Colorado (6:52.1) 2nd: K-State (6:57.7)
- Men's Open Varsity Eight-400 meters
1st: K-State (1:11.1) 2nd: Creighton (1:11.7)
- Men's Open Varsity Eight-2000meters
1st: Colorado (6:34.6) 2nd: K-State (6:44.6)

for victory.

However, amid all of the hustle and intensity late in the games, it is easy to tell, through all the pats on the back and shouts of encouragement, that there is a fellowship among the players that will keep them coming back to play every day.

"It's a really great time," Rodgers said. "I have been every day this week — it's a blast."

Tabor knocked in three of those runs against Wichita State on one hit alone. With runners at first and third in the top of the fourth inning, he hit a three-run home run just clearing the fence in left-center field, knocking in junior J.D. Loudabarger and freshman Pat Maloney.

The homer was the second of the season for Tabor and just the 10th of his career.

"I was looking for a fastball and just a place I could drive it," Tabor said.

"I was up with two outs with the bases loaded the inning before, and I grounded out to the third baseman."

"I was just looking for something to drive into the outfield. It got up a little bit, and with the wind and everything, it kind of helped out a little bit and it got out of here. It was kind of nice."

However, Tabor was quick to acknowledge the caliber of Wichita State.

"It's real exciting (for me)," Tabor said. "Wichita State is a quality team and a quality program. They're contending every year."

Tabor's performance against the Shockers on the road was a nice turnaround for the senior, after an uneventful 0-for-12 hitting slump in April's series against Missouri.

"He was focused," K-State head coach Mike Clark. "He came off the Missouri series and went into the cage on Monday and hit for an hour."

"He hit for tough luck yesterday — he did get a couple of hits — but then did a great job today. Chad's a gamer. He's a great kid, and we've been real fortunate to have him for four years."

Tabor agreed that Monday's workout paid off for him in his performance against the Shockers.

"I struggled greatly against Missouri, and it was real discouraging for me. But I went in, worked on it and got some things figured out," Tabor said.

"I'm really excited to have a game like this."

Lutheran Campus Ministry sponsors hate-crimes vigil tonight in Union

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Lutheran Campus Ministry — ELCA — would like to offer students an original opportunity during today's National Day of Prayer.

Mel White, reverend and co-founder of Souforce Inc., will deliver the keynote address and lead participants in the Stop the Hate Vigil at 7 tonight in the Union K, S and U Rooms.

The author of works including his autobiography, "Stranger at the Gate: To Be Gay and Christian in America," White is known for his university addresses on several topics, including the acceptance of homosexuals in religious organizations, said Jayne Thompson, pastor with the Lutheran Campus Ministry.

The vigil is meant to draw together people regardless of faith, race or sexual orientation in order to halt hate crimes, Thompson said.

"This is our invitation for the university to gather regardless of faith group to stand together and agree we stand against violence," she said.

White's opening address to the crowd will be followed by prayer, song and a litany of remembrance for the people who have fallen victim to hate crimes, Thompson said. A short time for questions also will be included in the vigil.

The end of the vigil will feature a peace walk, with participants making their way from the Union to Nichols Hall for a snack reception.

Following the vigil, Danforth Chapel will be open until 6 a.m. Friday for private prayer, Thompson said.

"It's not organized by any group," she said.

"It's just a silent time for prayer." A prayer and conversation session with White also is open to the general public at 3 p.m. today in the Union Flint Hills Room. However, Thompson said those interested should RSVP at 539-4451 or pastorj@ksu.edu due to limited seating.

Amy Wood, chairwoman of Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee and sophomore in family life and community service, said UPC was approached by Lutheran Campus Ministry to raise the money needed to bring White to Manhattan. Eight campus groups are contributing to the vigil.

The Union is preparing for a good turnout for the event, Wood said.

"He's respected among a lot of the clergy in a lot of different religions," she said.

"He's not specific to one religion, so we should get a lot of people that want to hear the principles he believes in."

Restaurant relocates after 130 years in Brookville

By KRISTEN DYMAK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's only one item to order at the Brookville Hotel — chicken.

But the chicken comes with mashed potatoes, creamed corn, baking powder biscuits and preserves, relishes, cottage cheese, sweet and sour coleslaw and vanilla ice cream.

Connie Martin, owner of the Brookville Hotel with her husband, Mark, said family-style chicken dinners have been served at the hotel since 1915.

"We pan fry our chicken," Connie Martin said. "Very few restaurants do it now, and most women don't want to do it anymore because it's too messy."

She said the Brookville Hotel, which now is located in Abilene, Kan., originally was built in Brookville, Kan., by the Kansas Pacific Railroad.

"It was a place for the railroad men to stay when they were working," she said.

Gus Magnuson bought the hotel in 1896, but Connie Martin said the chicken dinners didn't start being served until 1915.

"Helen Martin started serving the chicken dinners," she said. "She really made the hotel what it is today."

Mark Martin, a fourth-generation owner of the Brookville Hotel, said it became just a restaurant when his family stopped renting rooms in 1972.

"At the time we stopped renting, rooms were $6 for a single and $7 for a double," he said.

The hotel was located in Brookville for 130 years until it closed and moved to Abilene at the beginning of the year.

Today is the first day the Brookville Hotel will be open to the general public since it moved.

(785) 263-2244

Connie Martin said they moved the hotel to Abilene because it was a tourist community.

"Abilene really fit with what we do," she said.

"It's a very friendly, aggressive-thinking community."

Mark Martin said even though the hotel has changed locations, the new building is very similar to the one in Brookville.

"The building is a replica of the old one," he said.

"We'll also have some of the hotel rooms furnished so people can visit them and see how they were."

Connie Martin said the chicken dinners also have remained the same because they are popular with people, and because they are traditional.

"They like to step back into what grandma did," she said. "They like the idea of what a family should be."

Mark Martin said chicken dinners are very familiar to people. "The tradition has been around for years and years," he said. "It's universally acceptable to almost everybody."

Because the Brookville Hotel is so new to Abilene, Mark Martin said it's important for people to call and make reservations, especially for the next two or three weeks.

"Our phone has already been ringing off the hook for reservations," he said.

"Mother's Day is already completely sold out."

Connie Martin said they were looking forward to starting the business in a new home.

"Everyone's welcome to visit," she said.

"We hope people will really enjoy their experience with us."

LAW OF LAST CHANCE

"I have almost 1,000 IDs from working at this bar. In three nights, I have taken up to 48 licenses and seen six people arrested."

— Gary "Bear" Bennett, Aggieville bouncer for more than 20 years

REED DUNN/COLLEGE

Gary Bennett checks IDs at the door of Rusty's Outback. In his 20 years at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and the Outback, Bennett has collected between 800 and 1,000 fake IDs. TOP: Bennett, more commonly known as Bear, talks with a doorman at Rusty's Outback. Bear has been a bouncer for more than 20 years at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and the Outback.

Aggieville bouncer works to keep Rusty's atmosphere safe for patrons

By TARYN FORT

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

He decided to change his ways after the divorce, and he said he felt like meeting people from all walks of life was essential to beginning a new chapter in his life.

So he went to the bar.

Gary Bennett, also known as Bear, has been a bouncer for more than 20 years and works at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. He began bartending at Aggieville, which now is Longhorn's, and tried to establish a new definition of a doorman.

"This job is exactly what I needed after my divorce," he said. "Most of my friends are married, and their wives did not like the idea of their husbands running around with a single guy, so I tried to find something that would keep me busy and my mind off of what was going on in my life."

He constantly is on the look for trouble in any situation that he faces on the job.

"I have what would be called a real job during the day," he said. "This is more of an outlet for me, and I enjoy the students. Being on the sober side of a bar atmosphere is extremely funny at times and also tends to get out of hand. I am a people watcher, and I find that I am always looking for a troublesome situation. That has come in quite handy for some of the customers at this bar."

Bear is the head bouncer and is in charge of hiring other doormen for Chance.

"Bear is the one to listen to when it comes to this job," said Rex Larson, senior in political science. "He is the one who I can always count on to give assistance when I am in a situation or even just making sure that an ID is not a fake."

Bear also has become infamous among the droves of people who frequent the bar. He has been working long enough that students and other customers from up to 15 years ago still recognize him.

"My parents live in Ohio, so I fly into the airport in Pennsylvania," he said. "I try to get back once a year or so, and I was walking through that airport with my father about two years ago and suddenly I heard someone yelling 'Bear!' I turned around to have a woman jump on me and giving me hugs. She had been a waitress at Chance in 1982, and she still remembered me. That right there is one of the reasons why I love this job. I love being social with people."

The protection of people is the No. 1 job of a bouncer.

"We try to protect women at this bar," he said. "All customers are important to us, but we realize that some of the women that work here as well as the ones who just come in to have a good time are more susceptible to trouble than anyone else. We will walk people to their cars, and I have even taken people home before. If someone is obviously in no shape to be going home alone, I try to always make sure that they have a safe way out of here."

Bear's co-workers said he is associated with safety, which makes him successful at his job.

"Some of the waitresses will not even work unless Bear is working," said Cory Asmann, junior in marketing and business. "Their parents meet him and realize that he is here, and then they want their daughters working when he is around. He is also mentor-like to us other bouncers that work here. We follow what he does and we listen."

Bear decides who gets hired as doormen as Chance then trains and evaluates them.

"I am very, very hard about carding customers. Our job is to make this the hardest bar to get into in Manhattan," he said. "I train the other doormen to make this one of the first priorities, and I expect them to uphold it. As far as the hiring goes, I always look for personality first. Friendly and social people are who are going to be the best at this job."

Bear said checking identification is one of the main parts of the job of a doorman, but sometimes violence becomes an issue as well.

"Of course, we have to calm people down from time to time," he said. "I have only been hit once, and getting rough is absolutely the last resort. Dealing with drunk, erratic people is difficult, and that is where intimidation comes in to play. I will not stand for behavior that is physically harmful to another person."

According to the Kansas Alcohol and Beverage Control, Chance has the largest ID collection of any bar in the state of Kansas.

"I have almost 1000 IDs from working at this bar. In three nights I have taken up to 48 licenses and seen six people arrested," Bear said. "If someone questions my take on their ID, I get a police officer to make an ID check, and if by chance I am wrong I might even buy their first drink. I try to teach the employees at this bar what every trick in the book is in regard to the use of fake identification. I have seen probably everything that there is to see."

More than anything, Bear is one friendly and popular face for K-State students.

"I remember him from the entire time I spent at K-State, and nothing makes a person feel good about themselves more than someone who deals with a lot of people on a regular basis to remember your name or face," said Kristi Davis, graduate in art history. "He truly is a part of this town and the university life of K-State."

Looking for an ADVENTURE

THE ADVENTURE OF A LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
• Freshman
• Sophomore
• Junior/Senior with 2 academic years
to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective - but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation - as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try - you won't regret it.

The women's equestrian team, which will start competition in the fall, will not necessarily only compete with schools in the Big 12 Conference, but with schools in its region as well. Only two other conference schools have women's equestrian. The team will feature both Western and English styles of riding and can have more than 100 women involved in the sport.

Max Urlick, athletic director, said as the sport becomes more well-known, he thinks that it increasingly will gain interest. He also said the partnership with the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry is a benefit to the addition of women's equestrian.

"This is a new experience for the students, the university and everyone involved," Urlick said.

Kent Crane, junior in park resource management, said he thinks adding women's equestrian will be beneficial to K-State because of the College of Agriculture. He said, however, he did not think the sport would bring many benefits to the entire university.

"I think that being an agricultural school, it will be very beneficial to the variety of sports that we do have," Crane said. "As for the university as a whole, I think it would have been better to add soccer or softball because it would involve more students as well as the conference."

Kelly Gratny, member of the equestrian team and sophomore in microbiology and pre-veterinary, said she was excited when she learned of K-State's latest addition. She said she was surprised the athletic department made the choice that it did, but she is hoping for a successful competitive year.

"This sport will offer a great deal of opportunity to K-State because it involves so many," Gratny said. "It will bring a lot of student involvement and become a great spectator sport."

He said it only takes about two minutes to get from the far end of the park to the north shelter.

The office building probably will be rebuilt, but Wells said the park had to wait on the insurance company to process its claim.

Emily O'Connor, freshman in agriculture education, was awakened at about 3:30 in the morning to an orange glow outside of her window.

Wilkerson said before they can file anything against Edwards, they would have to prove he had made a false allegation. The attorneys would have to sit down together, review the case and discuss what to do.

"We would have to prove that his complaint against Barnett was false," Wilkerson said. "We would have to have at least two separate written statements from him. We would have to prove that there was some malice on his part. Things aren't always what the accusers say they are to be."

The case was dismissed with prejudice, which means charges cannot be filed again, Wilkerson said.

K-State Sports Information has not released any information regarding Barnett's suspension from the team. He was suspended after the arrest and has not taken part in spring practices.

parked outside the burned-out building.

No one was hurt in the blaze, Wells said.

The cause of the fire still is under investigation and the park's parent company still is assessing the damages, he said.

The park office is scheduled to reopen in the north community center today. The Foremost Brokerage firm, whose offices also were in the burned building, also will move to the community building, Wells said.

A pool outside the office building also will be closed.

successful in generating funds.

Douthitt also said the amount of practice time for the team will depend on the number of horses acquired.

The number of horses will depend on donations from the community and alumni, and she said team members will get more opportunity to practice with more horses.

"A lot will depend on the number of horses the team has,"

Douthitt said. "We will not be able to practice as much as we like with less horses."

The decision to add a new women's sport was due to becoming compliant with Title IX, a federal law introduced in 1972 that demands equal participation for men and women in sports.

Competition will begin next year with the team competing in Region 2, Zone 7. Texas A & M and Oklahoma State University are the only other universities in the Big 12 Conference that have equestrian teams.

Medical MD & Veterinary Programs

Hope Medical Institute (HMI) is currently accepting applications for September/October 2000 semesters from committed students. If you are:

- College graduate with pre-med or pre-vet background
- College graduate without pre-med or pre-vet background
- 2-year college education with concentration in science courses
- High school graduate who wants to become a M.D. or D.V.M.

The next semester starts September/October 2000 at our affiliated Universities in Poland. Courses are conducted in the English language. The institutions and programs are well recognized by the World Health Organization, American Medical and Veterinary Exam Boards as well as the U.S. Department of Education.

Full financing by the U.S. Government is available. Due to very limited time and availability of space, apply immediately if you think you have what it takes to be a good physician or veterinarian. Call for further information at:

Low-Power Radio vs. High-Powered Lobbyists

Act now to save America's last chance for local radio.

The National Association of Broadcasters spends over $5 million a year lobbying and hands out more than $1,000 a day to federal candidates.

So when it decided to squelch an FCC plan that lets schools, churches, and civic groups serve neighborhoods with low-power FM stations, unsurprisingly, it won the vote in the House.

The New York Times called the vote "regrettable." The Washington Post said it was "a bad idea." The Los Angeles Times rushed to defend the FCC, which "works for the American people, not just powerful Washington lobbyists..."

The broadcast lobbyists want to keep broadcasting in the hands of a few corporations. Which means that all radio, once the most diverse and local of mediums, sounds the same everywhere. They also want to weaken the FCC and win final say on how America's airwaves, a priceless public resource, are allocated in the future. This gives big broadcasters even more power and profits than they had before.

But democracy doesn't mean that the richest, loudest voice wins. Not every time. Not this time.

Low-power radio can still be saved by the Senate. And it will be, if your Senators learn that you've joined thousands of

"Low-power for the public"

Low-power FM stations are 10- or 100-watts (compared to 100,000 watt commercial stations) with a range of a few miles. Only community non-profit groups (churches, schools, and others with an educational purpose in a specific geographic area) will be eligible for licenses. Low cost, low-power FM is the last chance for radio to return to its truly local, community-service roots. The FCC was to begin licensing in May until the NAB tried to overturn the plan in Congress.

The NAB's Deceptive CD

In an attempt to pressure Congress, the National Association of Broadcasters fabricated a compact disk simulating interference it claimed low-power FM stations would cause. The FCC itself has denounced the NAB's simulation as "misleading disinformation." Independent analysis has found the NAB's technical case against low-power radio "invalid."

Computer virus spreads

■ 'ILOVEYOU' e-mail infects systems worldwide, destroys personal files.

By BRUCE MEYERSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A software virus that seduced computer users with an e-mail note proclaiming "ILOVEYOU" crippled government and corporate computer networks around the world Thursday and destroyed personal files of music and pictures.

By some estimates, the "love bug" infected tens of millions of computers worldwide, spreading not only by e-mail like last year's Melissa virus, but through instant messaging systems that let people chat on the Internet.

New variations of the virus were already circulating by Thursday evening, including one disguised as a joke with an e-mail attachment reading "Very Funny."

In another malicious twist, the virus was designed to destroy several types of increasingly popular computer files, including those storing pictures, video and music.

Computer security experts, stunned by the rapid spread of the virus, urged computer users to delete any news director at WCCO-TV in Minneapolis, who deleted the files and suffered no damage. "That's in addition to the 200 I had when I signed on today."

The love bug was activated by opening the "LOVELETTER" attachment. It would commandeer a computer's Internet browser to visit a Web page — which was later shut down by its service provider. At the Web site, the bug would download a program that searched for various types of passwords and sent them to an e-mail account that appeared to be based in the Philippines.

"If this is unleashed on your home computer, I hope you have backups. It is a destructive file. Once it has run, it has done its damage," said Shawn Herman, vulnerability team manager at the CERT Coordination

The worldwide computer virus labeled "ILOVEYOU," carrying the "LOVELETTER" attachment, has infected area computers.

Bill Lansdowne, information systems coordinator for Riley County, said he read on the Internet that the virus originated in Manila, Philippines, and spread around the world, including Riley County, in record time.

"The county was impacted pretty heavily. We had a chance to assess the damage, and we think that one of our servers was touched and more than 13 random users in the county have reported being infected," Lansdowne said.

Military open house shows off Fort Riley

■ Public can visit Marshall Army Air Field for tours, tank battles, night-vision demo.

By CHRISTIE VANOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thunder will be rolling out of Fort Riley in the form of a tank battle Saturday, and the public at large is invited to check out the action.

The post will have its first open house on Marshall Army Air Field this Saturday.

Maj. Art DeGroat, open house project officer, and other key personnel have planned many large-scale activities, including a tank battle, M-16 assault course and night-vision exhibit.

"We will showcase the vast amount of military technologies and capabilities resident at Fort Riley, as well as the support systems that make Fort Riley a healthy, vibrant place to live, work and play," he said.

The day begins at 10 a.m. with parachutists, military aircraft flyovers and a 2,000-soldier parade. At 11 a.m., the displays, hands-on exhibits, demonstrations and battle of the bands begin.

"We have designed the day's activities to be both informative and entertaining," DeGroat said. "Our exhibits will be organized to provide a theme-park-like atmosphere for our guests who are free to tour and recreate in accordance with their own interests and pace."

Recently redeployed from Bosnia, the 1st Battalion will have an interactive night-vision exhibit inside a dark hangar.

With goggles on, people inside the hangar will see a cast of green that enables wearers to see even the smallest details in the once-dark area, allowing visitors to get a new perspective of what the military is capable of seeing at night.

"As they look down the hangar with the naked eye, they won't see anything more than dark images," said 1st Lt. Richard Downs, air defense artillery liaison officer for the 1st Brigade. "When they don the equipment, they'll be able to make out what's down there."

A weapons familiarization station will allow visitors to handle military machine guns and test their skills using lasers and blank ammunition. The Army's laser engagement system shoots a beam through an M-16 rifle, designating a hit or miss.

At 2 p.m., blasts from a force-on-force tank battle will rattle the bleachers.

"One tank platoon and one Bradley platoon, augmented with Air Defense Artillery, engineers and Field Artillery will conduct a deliberate attack with a breach against a defending enemy, replicated by captured vehicles," Downs said.

Athlete arrested Thursday night

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State football player Turrelle Williams was arrested Thursday morning in Aggieville for disorderly conduct, Sgt. Lynette Woods of the Riley County Police Department said.

Around 2:15 a.m., Williams was arrested by Officer Scott Hagemeyer at the Aggieville Burger King after a verbal fight broke out. No other persons were arrested at the scene, Woods said.

Williams is a junior linebacker for the Wildcats. He was released on a $500 bond and will have to appear before the city court. Woods was unsure at this time as to when he would make an appearance.

K-State Sports Information had no comment about the situation.

Students should look for rental safety

■ Services available for inspections, lease advice.

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Good location and price might be important things to consider when looking to rent an apartment, but staff at K-State's Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs hope students also will consider safety of the property.

According to Andrew McDonnell, senior in business management and director of consumer and tenant affairs, there are many things everyone should consider when looking to rent an apartment or house.

"Students don't realize that there are many things to look at before signing a lease such as asking for inspections and making sure you understand the contract thoroughly," McDonnell said.

McDonnell said looking at the house several times, understanding what the landlord expects and making sure you know about the start-up costs of the utilities will cut back on potential problems.

McDonnell said 99 percent of the problems they deal with in their office are landlord or tenant issues.

"People need to look at the whole picture before they get into a contract, in order to avoid problems with landlords," McDonnell said.

Phil Anderson, instructor of speech communications and rental property owner, said some of the problems he has had with tenants include failure to pay rent on time or complaints of noise and excessive litter.

"I always hope that my tenants will respect the property and return it in the same condition as it was when they moved in," Anderson said, "but there are the occasional problems depending on the person."

Anderson said there are many things landlords must do to fulfill their part of the tenant/landlord relationship as well.

"We have codes we have to live up to like making sure the roof does not leak, having properly vented furnaces, installing pipes correctly and making sure the electricity is wired by a licensed electrician," Anderson said.

McDonnell said many problems after the lease signing stem from the fact that the tenants did not look at the lease thoroughly or investigate the property well enough before moving in.

"Getting everything in writing is crucial," McDonnell said. "Any offers the landlord makes should be in writing."

Anderson said that as a landlord, developing a good relationship with your tenants is obviously important.

"Some tenants I have never wanted to have again, whereas others were gems," Anderson said. "So it just depends on the person."

Maryland judge to rule on legality of Tripp wire tap

ELLICOTT CITY, Md. — Linda Tripp's wiretapping troubles soon could be eased or even erased by a Maryland judge.

The judge in the case must decide whether to throw out certain evidence — including testimony from the prosecution's star witness, Monica Lewinsky — or dismiss the charges altogether. She also could allow the case to proceed to trial in July as planned.

Circuit Judge Diane Leasure said she expects to rule by this afternoon.

A grand jury indicted Tripp on July 30 on two counts of breaking Maryland wiretap law. Prosecutors allege she illegally recorded a conversation with Lewinsky in 1997 and disclosed the tape's contents to Newsweek magazine a few weeks later.

The tapes, recorded from the living room of Tripp's Columbia, Md., home, triggered Kenneth Starr's investigation into Lewinsky's affair with President Clinton.

Maryland law prohibits the interception of telephone conversations without the consent of both parties.

If convicted, Tripp could face 10 years in prison and a $20,000 fine. She is the only main figure in the Clinton sex scandal to face criminal charges.

Tripp received a grant of immunity from federal prosecution, but that didn't stop Maryland authorities from bringing a case against her. Maryland prosecutors were forced, however, to gather their own evidence, independent of anything Tripp provided to Starr.

Defense attorneys argued the judge should dismiss the case because it was tainted by evidence from the Starr investigation. Tripp's attorneys say Lewinsky's testimony partially was derived from Tripp's immunized testimony, and that prosecutors made no attempt to shield the Maryland grand jurors from news of the Starr investigation.

Lewinsky testified in December that she independently recalled the date of the crucial telephone conversation Tripp is charged with illegally taping. But Lewinsky told prosecutors in writing in August 1998 that the information came from Tripp's immunized statements to Starr.

Lewinsky's testimony is considered crucial because she established that Tripp made the tapes without her consent.

Tripp attorney Joseph Murtha said throwing out Lewinsky's testimony would amount to a virtual dismissal of the case.

"If the judge suppresses the testimony of Monica Lewinsky, the state will have to come up with some innovative ways to actually prosecute Linda Tripp," he said Thursday.

Prosecutor Thomas M. McDonough said, "If the judge suppresses significant evidence, that's going to create some problems for us. Certainly it's going to make things more difficult."

California student arrested for allegedly killing landlady

SAN FRANCISCO — A 27-year-old college student allegedly told police that he killed his landlady, dismembered her body and discarded the parts throughout the city.

Vadim Mieseges was arrested at a San Francisco-area mall after he tried to hit security guards with a wooden dowel, police said. Later, he "suddenly blurted out" that he had killed the woman with whom he shared an apartment, police Deputy Chief Richard Holder said.

Mieseges, a computer science student at San Francisco State University, was booked for investigation of murder and is now in the San Francisco County jail.

Police said he led investigators to at least three locations, including Golden Gate Park, where a human torso was found Wednesday. Police did not disclose whether other body parts were found.

Forensic tests will determine whether the torso belonged to Ella Wong, 47, from whom Mieseges sublet a room, police said. A family member of Wong's reported her missing April 30.

Mieseges was taken into custody at the mall Monday after security guards said he pulled the dowel from a display, put it in his belt like a sword and later waved it at them, police said.

Mieseges told police he came to the United States in 1996 from his native

Switzerland, where he was institutionalized. He takes prescription medication for attention deficit disorder, according to police reports.

April sales. Dreary, cold weather in April kept Americans from getting in the buying mood for T-shirts and garden supplies, dampening sales at many of the nation's biggest chain store for the month.

Many chains reported sales figures that were below expectations, and a number of retailers, including Kmart and Gap, said the disappointing results reported Thursday probably will hurt their first-quarter earnings.

"It was 35 degrees out, and most people weren't thinking about buying spring clothing. That's what is behind the troubles with April," said Kurt Barnard, who runs the consulting firm Barnard's Retail Trend Report.

Analysts were quick to point out that the sluggish sales were mostly weather-related and did not represent a sweeping pullback in consumer spending because of rising interest rates or stock market volatility.

Still, many say that a spending slowdown probably will come later this year, because of the Federal Reserve's efforts to cool off the economy.

"Alan Greenspan (Federal Reserve chairman) always gets what he wants, and he wants to see spending slow," said Thomas Tashjian, a retail analyst at Bank of America Securities in San Francisco.

Many merchants expected April to be a blockbuster month. Easter fell three weeks later this year than last, shifting most of the holiday buying into April from March a year ago.

But the eastern half of the country saw cool, wet weather, which affected sales of everything from shorts to patio furniture at Sears, Kmart, Gap, Federated Department Stores and May Department Stores.

The Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi retail sales index, which tracks about 80 chains, rose 7.9 percent in April from the same month a year ago, when the index rose 4.2 percent.

Because of the Easter shift, most retailers will combine their March and April results to get a better reading on their performances. The Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi index rose 5 percent for the combined months, versus 7.1 percent a year ago.

Cinco de Mayo. Americans will toss tortillas and down shots of tequila today in honor of Cinco de Mayo, partying with a fervor that leaves many Mexicans scratching their heads in wonder.

Cinco de Mayo is a Mexican holiday, but a small one. It marks a May 5, 1862, victory by a small army of Mexican patriots and peasants over stronger French forces, but it's not Mexican Independence Day — a common misconception among Cinco de Mayo partiers in the United States.

In the United States, it's become the Latin version of St. Patrick's Day — largely because makers of beer, chips, salsa and tequila heavily promote it as a reason to party.

Union renovations to be completed this summer

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A construction project that has cost $9 million to date is reaching an end in the K-State Student Union.

However, the building has not seen the last of project contractors.

Architect Mike Mayo said during a construction planning meeting Thursday that the beginning phase of the Union construction project, renovations to the inside of the building, will be complete by July 15, a full four months ahead of schedule.

"It's one of the most successful large-scale construction projects around," said Abe Fattaey, associate director of facility planning.

Certain sections of the Union, such as the Main and West Ballrooms, Commerce Bank and Forum Hall, are completely finished.

"We've done a good job of beating the extra days," project contractor Greg Stueve said. "We have more time, but we're not really going to need it."

Stueve said additional portions of the Union, such as the coffee shop meant to be placed on the first floor, are in need of only slight adjustments, such as an accent wall that would draw students into the Union Food Court.

The renovations have turned into more of a hassle than workers expected, with unexpected concerns such as piping needing attention, Fattaey said.

"We're not enhancing the interior — we're changing the infrastructure," he said.

"We're really upgrading three decades of construction, trying to bring everything up to today's codes."

Workers also have run into setbacks during the long months of construction: materials stolen from the work site set the project back two weeks in mechanical areas, Stueve said.

Fattaey, the money manager for the project, said the setbacks have not affected money matters much, with the $8,966,079 spent on the renovations well within the construction budget.

"We're on budget," he said. "There's no money left over, but we are on budget."

Now that the Union's interior is nearing completion, employees of the Union and McPherson Contractors now can focus on their outdoors project: the Union Plaza, a sort of outdoor student lounge that will cost about $1 million.

"The plaza won't be completed until November," Union Director Bernard Pitts said. "It's designed to be the feature that introduces you to the Union."

Phase two of the Union project, the construction of a student activities center, should begin its planning stage after decisions are made by Student Governing Association, Mayo said.

Flinthills Living Wage Coalition promotes living wage importance to commission

By MAGGIE MARTIN AND TAMARA MANN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many residents of Manhattan continue to fight to bring a living-wage ordinance to the community.

In February, the Flinthills Living Wage Coalition submitted its proposal for a living wage to the Manhattan City Commission.

"A living-wage policy is a statement of our civic values," said John Exdell, chair of the Flinthills Living Wage Steering Committee. "It says that in Manhattan, we respect not only the contributions of investors, but also the men and women who do the work."

Establishing a living wage is becoming a popular issue in communities across the nation, he said. The idea behind the issue is that employers who receive tax money should be required to pay their employees enough to support a family.

The ordinances usually cover employees who have city or county service contracts, or receive substantial financial assistance from the city in the form of grants, loans, bond financing, tax abatements or other economic benefits.

The coalition has determined the living wage for a single-parent, two-child family in Manhattan to be $8.11, including good health insurance. The study that has been used as a basis for the coalition identifies this wage level for a single-headed female household. The wage implies that the family still will benefit from government support, assistance and activities.

"The proposal is very detailed, which could lead to several possible problems," Bruce Snead, city commissioner, said. "Some of the issues are not viable, too restrictive, too prescriptive and too hard to enforce."

At the first level, the proposed draft is constructed to include any business that receives public money collected through taxes. If the business uses the public money, it would be subject to pay the living wage.

Some individuals opposed to the living wage include Manhattan officials who are concerned about challenges a living wage and issues beyond the implementation of an hourly wage could propose.

"The regulation of businesses by government increases the fear that implementation of the living wage could stifle economic interest in Manhattan, therefore turning away expansion and business relocation to this area," Ed Klimek, city commissioner, said.

Carol Peak, city commissioner, said some employers they talked with stated the living wage would have a chilling effect on their decision to locate within the Manhattan area.

"Even though some employers stated the living wage would place a business representative for local unions

negative outlook on the possibility of locating within the area, we still don't know if this effect would prove true.

"We don't really know if this would discourage economic development. Other communities have reported no economic loss as a result of the implementation of a living wage," Peak said.

Members of the coalition said they think the pro-growth critics have provided no convincing evidence for their predictions, which so far have not proven true in other communities with living-wage ordinances.

Another concern is wage competition between local businesses that do not receive tax money and those that do.

"If the tax-receiving businesses are forced to increase their wages, there is a possibility that other local businesses would have to raise their wages also in order to remain competitive and attract responsible workers," Klimek said.

"I believe the market should dictate wages and choose how to operate their business," he said. "In Manhattan's situation, it's difficult to attract quality employees. In order to get quality employees you have to pay people a fair amount. It should be up to the business the level they choose to operate on."

The coalition has trouble with this argument, stating that if attracting new businesses will increase the price of wages and pinch existing businesses, this could just as well happen without a living wage policy.

Another point commissioners discussed was the possible elimination of lower-level employment.

"One of the arguments that was touched upon was the possibility of a decrease in the number of jobs for students," Klimek said. "If employers would have to adhere to a living-wage, they might not have the positions they have now because they couldn't afford it."

Klimek said the city also is concerned about the accountability of the program. He said they would have to create some type of department whose primary function would be to keep track of businesses who pay living wages, and that keeping track of the wages could become cumbersome. The expenses would come out of the city government's accounts.

Peak said she thinks the challenge should be to implement a policy that is narrowly focused.

"Speaking for myself, I support the idea and concept of the living wage, but we need to make it work in this community," Peak said. We need to identify a decent wage for everyone. The challenge is to implement a policy that's narrowly focused, and to avoid a policy that would create a lot of other impacts," Peak said.

Bob Stalder, business representative for local unions, said unions have taken a big interest in the living wage issue.

"We believe in the dignity of work," Stalder said. "Most capital is earned on the backs of labor."

"Our goal is a betterment of working people. If you go out and work 40 hours per week but still have to receive food stamps, it takes away from your dignity," he said.

Even after a recent economic boom, all some graduates can do is try to keep

For those who have been too busy to notice, we only have one more week until most of us are having hot fun in the summertime while others simply will continue the tradition of higher learning by attending summer classes.

There is a large group of K-State students, however, who will have no more papers, no more books, no more teachers' dirty looks after commencement May 12 and 13. These lucky seniors will be moving on to bigger and better things called their lives — except those who are overly ambitious and are going to graduate school.

These young men and women will be entering the so-called real world where they must find a job or suffer the pains of moving back in with Mom and Dad. As if actually having to work — something that simply is not done in college — isn't bad enough, some even will decide to complicate their lives further by getting married. Gone, unfortunately, are the days of partying until the cows come home and seeing how many shots it takes to make your dog fall over drunk.

Despite having the longest period of economic growth in our nation's history and the lowest unemployment rate in years, the benefits of this booming economy are not being distributed equally. As a result, many of these graduates will be forced to work two or three jobs just so they can pay all of their bills — remember all of those college loans and the unnecessary credit card purchases? Why else would college graduates be forced to work in a restaurant flipping hamburgers or in a department store when they are not the manager or owner?

These graduates will be thrown into the dog-eat-dog world of modern society, where they will have to fight tooth and nail using the knowledge they gained while they were in college to survive — assuming they actually went to class. All graduates will have the chance to be successful in life. Many of them have the possibility of becoming important executives, and a handful will have the opportunity to establish a successful company of their own. Now that Microsoft has been declared a monopoly and might be forced to split up, some graduates will have to worry about becoming too successful.

Occasionally, well-deserving people go on to be successful. However, it usually is those who know how to manipulate the system who actually thrive within this fast-paced world. These people use the system to their own advantage and operate under the belief that what they do isn't illegal until they get caught. Just ask the former Wall Street executive who was convicted of an insider-trading plot with his porn-star girlfriend. Amid all the doom and gloom of the real world, America still is the land of opportunity, and everyone has the chance to become a success. Just ask Sam Walton, Ross Perot, Walt Disney or Henry Ford.

So, dream high and far and continue to reach for the stars so one day you might become the CEO of AOL Time Warner or the founder of a revolutionary company that changes the world forever. Just remember the road to success never will be paved or lined with gold. It will require years of hard work and dedication — not to mention blood, sweat and tears.

Perhaps one day, you will realize true success cannot be measured by money or material things.

To graduating seniors, I wish you the best and hope you find happiness and success in whatever you do.

To everyone else, I hope you have a great summer, and I look forward to seeing you in the fall.

Many lessons learned in 1st year away from home

This has been my first year away from home. It has been a year filled with ups and downs. Some of the things I've learned include the following:

■ If 20 people sign up to play a recreational softball team, chances are you still will have to forfeit because you don't have enough players.

■ The words "lesson" and "experience" sound a lot better than the word "mistake."

■ Money cannot buy love.

■ On trips, your companion is more important than your destination.

■ You cannot make someone love you.

■ People often are oblivious to the situations they are in when it comes to finding solutions for their problems.

■ There are different levels of being broke.

■ Happiness is the most important part of your life.

■ Finals and grade point averages are not entirely what college is about.

■ How you say something is just as important as what you say.

■ Who your professor is plays a large part in the grade you get in the class.

■ Some things happen in life that you can't control. But the things that you can control, such as your attitude, you should.

■ An education will not necessarily make you more intelligent. In actuality, it will make you realize how many things you don't know.

■ You will get financially screwed when it comes to selling back textbooks.

■ Drinking until you vomit is not deemed as social drinking.

■ It is important to know who to drink around, when to drink and where it is appropriate to drink.

■ There are ways to combine what little amount of food you have into a tasty treat that you should eat with your eyes closed.

■ There always will be people who think there are better places than where they are at now.

■ Some students are in too big of a rush to leave the world of college behind.

college behind.

■ Other college students can tell you the history of the college from first-hand experience.

■ If you take a suitcase on a one-night camping trip, you will be made fun of.

■ SUDS is a great place to get party information, not only for students, but also for the police.

■ No matter how old you are, as long as you are in school, you will pray for a snow day. Even if it is May.

■ You can learn more in an internship than you can in any class with lectures.

■ There are three things you can discuss that are guaranteed to start an argument: politics, religion and greys vs. non-greys.

■ Just because drinks at Bobby T's Bar and Deli are half price on Sunday doesn't mean you should drink twice as many as usual. Well, maybe you should, just expect your head to hurt twice as bad.

■ Some people honestly did obtain their driver's license from a Cracker Jack box.

■ The interstate between here and Topeka will be under construction forever.

■ Your family members are the most important people in your life.

■ If you have true friends, you are wealthy.

■ Don't carry anything of value that you absolutely need in your purse or wallet.

■ Make sure you have a camera for 21st birthday celebrations.

■ Being a columnist for the Collegian has given me some wonderful nicknames such as "troubled person with tendencies of alcoholism," "communist" and "insensitive."

■ Never make drunken wrestling bets when you are wearing boots with high heels and photographers are around.

Whatever you do this summer, keep some things in mind. On those long road trips, turn the air conditioner off and roll down the windows.

Remember to kick back on those lazy summer evenings without a care in the world and a cold Bud Light in your hand.

After all, you have to recoup from this semester somehow.

I think we should prosecute Scott Adams to the full extent of the law for plagiarizing the Gongfarmers strip.

I always knew Danetri Thompson was journalistically inept.

There is no such thing as acceptable gun control.

I just wanted to say that I am the proud owner of a Johnson County jalopy.

Elian Gonzalez: just another topic for the news to go on and on about that goes absolutely nowhere.

The Gongfarmers sucked twice as much today.

READERS write

SGA president attempts to clarify Internet policy

Editor,

I would like to respond to the lead article in Thursday's Collegian regarding the ban on Napster, warez sites and related programs.

I want to take this opportunity to give my thoughts on the subject and clear up misinterpretations that might have come from the article.

First, the Student Senate resolution was written and supported with the intent that we curb abuse of K-State Internet resources.

We, as students, understand the need to have K-State resources available online at all times for academic purposes.

In my opinion, any nonacademic use that prohibits approved use of the Internet must be stopped.

This does not mean every student who surfs the Web or downloads an MP3 file through Napster or other related programs needs to be stopped.

However, if that student uses these or related programs to the point it abuses the system and interferes with other students, that abusive activity should be stopped.

Second, the vice provost's office will not be on a witch hunt to find students using Napster, warez or related software.

They will attempt only to find students using these programs when there is an abuse of the Internet resources.

If students use the Internet responsibly, there will not be a problem.

Under the current policy, use of these programs for non-academic purposes is already prohibited.

The main point of the support from SGA and from Vice Provost Beth Unger's e-mail is to educate and inform students about responsible use of the Internet under current policy.

I support the effort to maintain academic access to our Internet resources.

I will continue to work closely with Unger and Computing and Network Services to ensure this policy only is applied to students who abuse our online resources.

I hope this letter helps clear up any confusion or concerns that might have stemmed from the e-mail or the Collegian article.

If you have further questions or concerns about this issue, please do not hesitate to e-mail me at jdw3018@ksu.edu or call me at 532-6541.

Webmaster defends page used by Parking Services

Editor,

I was appalled when I read Kenneth Snuffer's letter in Wednesday's Collegian.

Parking Services does have a Web site, www.ksu.edu/parking. The Parking Services Web site easily is the most exciting site K-State offers.

Here, students can find all the rules and regulations they ever could want.

There also is a page for submitting comments, which I think many students might find particularly useful.

Reader discovers errors, apologizes for mistakes

Editor,

Unfortunately, I have found myself propagating false information.

A response from David Vogel to my letter to the editor prompted me to verify my assertions.

Upon inspection, I now believe the Justice Department and the INS were acting within their rights and responsibilities.

This reiterates the necessity of verifying facts and assumptions. It also demonstrates that reliance on the media is ill-serving to oneself and to others with whom you share your information.

I would like to publicly apologize to Vogel.

His commentary seems to be completely valid.

I also would like to apologize to anyone who might have used my opinion to reaffirm their position.

Finally, I want to thank David Waters for his letter to the editor in which he gave a great link showing the circumstances for the issuing of the warrant for Elian Gonzalez.

Bicyclist replies to letter, puts fault on pedestrians

Editor,

With all the students I hear complaining about the problem with bicycles, it seems I need to voice my opinion supporting those of us who choose this more efficient means of transportation.

It seems to me the real issue is the pedestrian problem. Let me explain with a little anecdote about my typical ride through campus.

It's 9:20 a.m. on a Tuesday.

The sun is out, and a slight breeze from the north makes it a perfect day to ride from the residence halls to Fairchild Hall.

I go out to the bike racks, unlock my bike and begin my quick journey through campus.

Little do I know the dangers that await on a campus where pedestrians rule.

Things start out OK.

I breeze through the parking lot, down the hill and onto Mid-Campus Drive. I pick up a little speed and begin cruising towards Fairchild at a somewhat conservative 80 mph. Now I'm in the zone. Nothing distracts me.

I have to calculate every intricate detail of the path I must take to avoid any unsuspecting pedestrians. I look ahead at the first crosswalk. To my dismay, the street is full. No problem.

I quickly calculate the angle of approach and point of entry for my unnoticed slide through the mass of students. Everything is perfect. Suddenly, to my unforeseeable shock, a pedestrian notices my approach.

He stops dead in his path like a deer in the headlights. He shimmies left and right, trying to guess my complicated strategies. My plan is ruined. I no longer can slip quietly behind his back, but quickly must compensate for his dumbfoundedness. Out of options and inches from the paralyzed victim, I slam on my brakes and slide to a screeching halt in front of him.

I mumble my apologies for his stupidity and quickly resume my trek toward work.

A little more cautious now, I easily dodge three other students who randomly decide to cross the street in the middle of nowhere without so much as turning their heads. I come safely to the intersection of Mid-Campus and Lovers Lane.

Now I'm safe. The bike lane should take me the rest of the way.

With a few quick shifts, I'm back up to speed and almost to work. But just when I think I'm safe, a student gets pushed out into the bike lane.

Those around him laugh, and he chuckles to himself, "Ha, I guess I'm in the bike lane, huh?"

Yes, you are.

And I'm only three inches from plastering you with rubber.

But my calmness saves us both. I quickly veer left and then back right to avoid the oncoming Pepsi-Cola truck. At last, I'm safe.

The three-minute ride to work was a little longer than I had hoped, but thankfully there were no injuries en route.

I only can lock my bike up and hope to myself that someday the pedestrians will learn to be cautious and not worry about us bikers.

Trust me, we know what we're doing.

PILOTS program offers incoming students individual attention, help

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new crop of freshmen will be exposed to the university next fall, and a campus support program will try to address retention rates and help with improving academic scores.

"It was referred to as PILOTS in the beginning because of the reference to actual pilots," said Anita Cortez, director of the PILOTS program. "Pilots have to study their trade, navigate the journey, have a destination, take off, fly and then soar to their goals."

Cortez said the program, which began six years ago, invites students from the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Human Ecology and Education who think they would benefit from extra attention.

PILOTS offers basic, general education courses at a different level with smaller class sizes, more instructors and individual attention. Cortez said the courses are not any easier but are catered to those who need extra help in math and writing skills. PILOTS also has its own private computer lab available with a bank of tutors to offer assistance.

"By having smaller classes, it gives students the opportunity to get on their feet and have a good first-year experience," Cortez said. "We want to improve freshmen retention rates, and by the looks of the latest statistics, they are going up."

Another portion of the program allows freshmen and sophomores to experience research at a graduate level while still undergraduates. Cortez said the Undergraduate Research Opportunity program was created two years ago and is based on a similar idea created by the University of Michigan.

She said the goal is to allow students to learn about research opportunities and get more connected with their field of study early on. Each student who participates in the program is paired with a faculty mentor and then begins working on a year-long project that is presented in late spring.

So far, Cortez said only two students have completed and presented projects, but she said the program still is under construction and should attract more students in the future. The program is open to all students.

"With this program, they can learn more about what their field of study is about and what research techniques are available to them,"

Cortez said. "They get inside their field and gain an early insight into what they want to do in the future."

Carol Oukrop, professor of journalism and mass communications, said she became a faculty mentor after she attended the research presentation last year. She said the program is another way of encouraging recruitment and retention for undergraduate students.

Cortez said both the research opportunity and the PILOTS program offer students the opportunity to learn about the university and gain more knowledge about their field of study.

"A lot of universities have similar support programs, but ours was unique when it was created," Cortez said. "The program gives students the chance to learn the ropes of a large university and learn how to navigate their way through campus."

"It is great to see the accomplishments of our students and see them reaching their goals and becoming leaders."

Medical MD & Veterinary Programs

Hope Medical Institute (HMI) is currently accepting applications for September/October 2000 semesters from committed students. If you are:

- College graduate with pre-med or pre-vet background
- College graduate without pre-med or pre-vet background
- 2-year college education with concentration in science courses
- High school graduate who wants to become a M.D. or D.V.M.

The next semester starts September/October 2000 at our affiliated Universities in Poland. Courses are conducted in the English language. The institutions and programs are well recognized by the World Health Organization, American Medical and Veterinary Exam Boards as well as the U.S. Department of Education.

Full financing by the U.S. Government is available. Due to very limited time and availability of space, apply immediately if you think you have what it takes to be a good physician or veterinarian. Call for further information at:

MCC students get double experience with proximity to K-State

By SHANNON DELMEZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students at Manhattan Christian College have a different perspective of college life from students at other Christian colleges. Located across from the K-State campus, MCC students have a chance to get double college-life experience.

"It's one of the things that sets Manhattan Christian College apart from some of the other Christian colleges that we are so close (to K-State) and our students can be exposed to some different perspectives that's helpful for them in preparing for ministry," said Greg Delort, MCC professor of pastoral counseling. "I think we could offer some things to the university students over here to expose students to different perspectives. I just think that's a great asset."

MCC students said they agreed the two institutions are mutually beneficial.

"As far as I know, MCC was built where it was intentionally," said Tiffany Craik, MCC senior in cross-cultural ministry. "It's not really a coincidence that we're across the street. A lot of people who go to MCC are involved in a lot of the ministries that go on at K-State like Campus Crusade for Christ or BSU (Christian Challenge), so there are a lot of connections with that."

Craik said there are a number of benefits MCC students have by being across the street from K-State.

"We have to do our math and science and a lot of those classes over at K-State," she said. "In terms of the curriculum and in terms of extracurricular activities, I see a lot of connection there."

"If we're not able to find books that we need at our library, then we have access to the K-State library," Craik said. "It's kind of nice, because since we have such a small campus, if there are things that we need, we can use what's available at KSU."

Delort said many MCC students work on a dual degree, one from MCC and one from K-State.

The most common of these dual degrees is Christian education at MCC and secondary or elementary education at K-State.

Craik said there are also many things MCC students have that are not available at universities such as K-State.

"I do like being at a small school, because I've gone to big schools before. I like the small-school atmosphere, just because you're more of a person, rather than just a number," she said. "I think when you have a smaller class, it opens it up more for discussion. You learn a lot because, rather than getting just the professors, you're getting a lot of other people's views. It also kind of frees up the professors more, so that you have more one-on-one time with them."

Lois Dillard, a student of pastoral ministry, said she thinks an institution like MCC provides a more close-knit community.

"With a smaller group of people, you become more intimate," she said. "You are more closely knit, just like in a small church. We always have prayer at the beginning of class."

Delort said another difference is that MCC professors are more involved in students' lives.

"I have students who go running with me Thursday mornings. Thursday evenings I have students at my house, and that's not unique to me," he said. "Most of the professors have students at their house quite a bit. We're involved in their lives. They know our families. There are a lot more interpersonal relations between faculty and students."

Craik said the school is involved in leadership. "I think there is a high need for leaders in the church to have a biblically based education, because in our society where there is a lot of post-modern thinking everybody has their own set of values," she said.

Dillard said she agreed that MCC reaffirms one's values.

"It helps you to become closer to the Lord," she said. "Just being with people, you learn from each and every one."

Center, the government-chartered computer security team at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

The FBI quickly opened a criminal investigation, and agents were trying to verify reports that the outbreak might have begun in Asia, possibly the Philippines.

Computer security firms scurried to post software on their Web sites to scan for the bug and remove it from infected machines.

The virus targets computers running on Microsoft's Windows operating system, attacking the Outlook e-mail program and the Internet Explorer browser, both of which are also made by Microsoft.

It spreads like most e-mail viruses, arriving as a seemingly friendly message, infiltrating a person's computer address book and sending copies of itself to contacts listed.

"It blew through here like a tornado," said Lou Fontana, a spokesman for the South Carolina Department of Parks, Recreation and Tourism, where the virus spread to individual terminals. "There were no survivors."

In addition to overwhelming computer networks with the sheer crush of e-mail it generates, the new virus strikes out at some of the most popular new passions on the Internet, destroying digital photographs and music stored with the digital technology known as MP3.

The virus disabled e-mail systems on Capitol Hill and in British parliament. State Department officials found the virus in many of their servers early Thursday and "shut off our connection with the outside world," spokesman Richard Boucher said.

AT&T Corp. shut down an e-mail system serving 145,700 employees.

"We're trying to give our tech support people enough room to find a cleanser and make us pure again," AT&T spokesman Burke Stinson said.

In Britain, about 30 percent of company e-mail systems were brought down by the virus, according to Network Associates, a computer security firm. In Sweden, the tally was 80 percent.

"The way we look at the 'I Love You' virus is it's almost like Melissa on steroids," said Srivats Sampath, president and chief executive of security firm McAfee.com, a division of Network Associates. "It's the fastest propagating virus we've seen."

Fort Riley to have band competition Saturday

By CHRISTIE VANOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The results are in, and seven bands are one step closer to winning $2,500 at Saturday's Fort Riley Open House.

After listening to about 20 audition tapes, Joey Eck, Fort Riley public-affairs intern, and Jay Gooldy, commercial sponsorship and advertising specialist, chose the seven bands who will compete in Fort Riley's Battle of the Bands 2000 at Marshall Army Air Field, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Eck said she was surprised by the number of entries. She also said there were a lot of good bands, which made it difficult to make a final decision.

In the end, the two judges chose Ruskabank, Podstar, Flybox, 8degrees, BFD, Eat at Joes and Brian Brooks and the Honky Tonk Heroes to entertain the crowd Saturday.

"These bands were better-sounding in general and were more appealing," Eck said. "We took into account the different types of music they play and what's going to keep the crowd."

The bands' genres include ska, rock, rapcore, country and alternative. "It's a good variety," Eck said. "We wanted to make sure we had music the crowd would stay interested in."

Manhattan's own Ruskabank is no stranger to large crowds or to the other bands it will be up against, Dave Studnicka, Ruskabank's trombonist, said. They've played with Podstar and BFD and have a gig in June with 8degrees.

"We're up against a very talented group of bands," Studnicka said. "I've heard of almost all of them. It will be a very stiff competition."

Ruskabank, like the other bands, is looking forward to getting the exposure, he said.

"This will help expand our fan base and get the Ruskabank name out to people who haven't heard us," Studnicka said.

On top of performing in front of an expected crowd of 30,000 people, the top-three bands will take home a total of $2,500. The first-place band will take home $1,500; second place, $750; and third, $250.

"I think the money will help with more promotional things and help sponsor tours in other states," Andrew Luxem, BFD's bass player, said.

BFD's band members are from Topeka High School. They said the largest crowd they've performed in front of is less than 1,000, so they are excited about the number of people expected to attend the open house.

"We're trying to branch off to a new audience, and we feel that this will get us new exposure," Luxem said.

For those wanting to check out the bands before Saturday, most have albums available at Streetside Records and Hastings, including BFD's new release, "Happy Hoof Prints."

"It's a good opportunity to go out and sample the local music scene for free," Eck said.

because user intervention is not required. Lansdowne said the attachment to the e-mail only has to be opened on a Windows-platform e-mail client such as Microsoft Outlook for it to replicate and forward itself to everyone in a person's address book.

"Never has the entire county been hit this severe," Lansdowne said. "We have seen individual instances of virus problems, but never on this scale."

Effects of the virus range from overwriting files and replacing them to changing system settings and crippling an entire computer.

Lansdowne said the country has taken its main server and some others off-line to prevent damage from the contaminated e-mail.

The virus has also hit computers on campus. According to the Computing and Networking Services Web page, www.ksu.edu/cns, measures have been taken to stop the spread of the message.

Upon detection of the virus, CNS installed a filter to deny access to any messages titled "ILOVEYOU" from the system. According to the Web page, 42 infected e-mails were stopped in the first 20 minutes by the filter.

If students with K-State addresses receives the e-mail, they can go to the F-Secure Anti-virus Program Web page at www.symantec.com install free anti-virus software to clean out their system.

Lansdowne said everyone is encouraged to protect themselves and others from the virus by watching out for the e-mail or running anti-virus programs.

"This is a problem that involves everyone who uses the Internet and e-mail. Precautions need to be taken," Lansdowne said.

OPEN HOUSE

Laser engagement systems will showcase the power of the Army's combined-arms team, DeGroat said.

Other demonstrations include Fort Riley's four-legged soldiers. The commanding general's Mounted Color Guard and K-9 team both will perform.

"We will be jumping obstacles, conducting mounted pistol and saber drills, saber fighting, formation jumps and, of course, the game the cavalry used to play to build confidence in both the rider and the horse, the jug pass," said James Rye, captain of the color guard.

One hangar will be devoted to an expo hall featuring booths from Fort Riley units and agencies. Soldiers from 1st Brigade will run a booth to answer questions about their recent deployment to Bosnia. Local chambers of commerce are also participating.

A Fest Tent filled with a variety of food and beer will be open all day while a battle of the bands competition rages inside for a top prize of $1,500.

Relaxing tours of Fort Riley's historic district will be conducted around Main Post followed by a tour of nationally significant sites such as the U.S. Cavalry Museum and the Custer House.

"People are really proud of the frontier history at Fort Riley," said Karen Kryschal, member of the historical and archeological society. "The tours give a good overall picture of how the post was and is laid out."

Post officials said they expect as many as 30,000 visitors to the event. The air field is located off Interstate 70 at exit 301.

"We are truly going all out to make this a great day for our guests, soldiers and military and civilian family members," DeGroat said. "Don't miss it."

Protesters removed from naval range

By CHRIS HAWLEY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico — Federal agents in riot gear Thursday peacefully removed at least 215 protesters, including nuns and two U.S. lawmakers, from a U.S. Navy bombing range on Vieques Island that they had blocked for more than a year.

The operation on Vieques Island began at first light and proceeded throughout the morning without the violence some had feared.

About 100 U.S. marshals quickly removed protesters at the range's main entrance, while some 200 FBI agents moved on a dozen other camps inside. Helicopters flew overhead. Protesters at several sites within the bomb-strewn range were taken away in plastic handcuffs — which a federal law enforcement official said some of the protesters requested.

Ron LaBrec, spokesman for the Joint Information Center established at the Roosevelt Roads Naval Station in Puerto Rico, said that as of midday, an estimated 215 were detained. Coast Guard spokesman Brent Erb said 52 journalists also were escorted from the range.

By early afternoon, all 12 protest sites had been cleared, FBI agent Dave Miller said. One environmental activist had chained himself inside a tank earlier, but authorities said they managed to remove him. It was unclear if he left voluntarily.

"We're still in the process of deporting the detainees back to the main island of Puerto Rico, where they'll be released," Miller said. He said the FBI was searching the range in case any protesters still might be hiding.

At a Washington, D.C., news conference, Attorney General Janet Reno said the demonstrators will not face charges as long as they don't return and haven't assaulted federal officers.

"All indications are that the protesters have handled themselves in a peaceful and dignified manner," she said.

The operation sparked a protest in Puerto Rico's capital, San Juan. Baton-wielding riot police on horseback stared down about 500 chanting demonstrators blocking the gates to the U.S. Army's Fort Buchanan. Protest organizers appealed for calm.

Just after 5 a.m. EDT, federal agents arrived at Vieques in vans with no lights. They were backed by glum-looking Puerto Rican anti-riot police in bulletproof vests, carrying sidearms and batons.

Efforts were made to avoid threatening language or gestures on both sides. Agents were armed with pistols or assault rifles carried casually on their shoulders, pointing down.

"You must leave the property immediately. ... If you do not leave promptly, we will have to remove you," a U.S. Marshal said over a megaphone at 5:15 a.m. Within minutes, four helicopters, one with red lights blinking, swept toward the range and the protest camps.

Check options before subleasing

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Subleasing is good way to save some money while away from school, but it can be a disaster if not handled properly.

Andrew McDonnell, director of Consumer and Tenant Affairs, said the first step to subleasing an apartment is receiving permission from the landlord.

"You have to go to your landlord and get permission and ask him how he wants to go about it. They usually have a contract for you, and the sub-leaser or you can write one yourself. But regardless, you have to have his permission before you can sublease," McDonnell said.

McDonnell said it also is important to remember the sublesser is living under your security deposit, so choose someone reliable.

"If you don't know them, state any belongings you're leaving there in the contract — customize it to fit your needs. And, try not to leave smaller items during the subleasing period."

Treat subleasing like you would renting an apartment, walk-through before moving in to establish previous damage to the house or apartment, McDonnell said.

Since there are many options for summer subleasing in Manhattan, McDonnell said the best way to make one apartment more attractive than another simply is to lower the rent.

"Charge a little bit less because if someone doesn't sublease from you, then you're still liable for that money," he said.

Consumer and Tenant Affairs can inform sublessees of steps to take, and the university attorney can look over contracts or help student write one of their own, McDonnell said.

Leslie Stewart, senior in elementary education, said trust is the most important requirement for a sublessee.

"I want to know I can trust her," Stewart said. "I want to make sure I don't get stuck with fines that weren't my fault, and that she is responsible."

Stewart said she hasn't asked for references from potential sublessees, but she does ask about their lifestyle and personal involvements to get a general idea of their personality.

"I subleased before and it was terrible," Stewart said. "They were complete strangers. I was younger and they were seniors with their own lives and involvements," she said.

Andrew Gough, sophomore in public relations, said he informally interviews potential sublessees.

"One of my roommates runs a business in the house and we don't want to get a sublessee getting a little snoop during the summer," Gough said.

Wildcat baseball to celebrate centennial

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will celebrate a century of tradition when intrastate rival Kansas comes to Manhattan for a three-game series this weekend.

The Wildcats will be celebrating their 100th season of baseball, with Saturday's introduction of the All-Century Team highlighting the festivities.

"It's going to be neat to see all the alums back, and we hope that we can play well on the field and make it a real special weekend," K-State head coach Mike Clark said.

The Cats kick off the series against the Jayhawks today at 4 p.m., followed by a 2 p.m. showdown Saturday and a 1 p.m. meeting Sunday.

Coming off an 18-6 thrashing of Wichita State Wednesday, K-State (18-27) is looking to build on the momentum of its first win over the Shockers since 1997.

"In baseball, every game is different," Clark said Wednesday. "You're only as good as the next starting pitcher, basically."

It's nice to have this win, but we'll wait and see whether we carry any momentum into it.

"I guarantee we'll have to have this kind of intensity that we had tonight against (Wichita State), otherwise KU will get us. We've got to get ready to play — we've got to be intense. It's a conference intrastate rivalry, and we need to play well."

Clark said the Hawks (22-26) are much improved from a year ago. In 1999, Kansas was swept by K-State in four games and finished 14-40 overall and 10th in the Big 12 Conference with a 4-26 mark.

"They're vastly improved over last year,"

Clark said.

"These are the same kids that put on 10 or 15 more wins than they did last year. They have great personnel, and they're playing well. Nobody's running over them — they're competing every ball game."

"They've got great arms, they've got good depth and it's going to be a heck of a challenge."

However, Clark said his team is up for that challenge, despite the Cats' inexperience.

"We've got a whole lot of young kids — we've only got three seniors in this group," Clark said.

"These guys are learning the mental part of it, the preparation you have to have, and how fiercely you have to compete when you're on the road as well as at home."

"Hopefully, we're learning that and being able to apply that to be successful."

We've got to get ready to play — we've got to be intense. It's a conference intrastate rivalry, and we need to play well.

Alena Jecminkova stretches to return a shot during a singles match earlier in the season. Jecminkova's strong finish late in the season is one of the reasons she made the field of this year's NCAA Tournament in the singles bracket. She was the only Wildcat tennis player to be selected for this year's NCAA Tennis Tournament.

Wildcat tennis team looks at record as reason for no NCAA Tournament team selection

Their faces told the entire story.

The players' disappointment was obvious when the announcement was made that the K-State tennis team did not make the 64-team field in the NCAA Tournament, and only Alena Jecminkova made the singles bracket.

After restlessly waiting for an hour after the satellite feed of the tournament selection show failed to work, the team received the sobering news via telephone. K-State was a fifth alternate, an announcement that wasn't totally surprising, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"The bottom line was our record wasn't good enough," Bietau said. "What we did wasn't strong enough to make it in. That's not good, that's not bad — that's just the way it is. We weren't good enough to get in."

After not making the bracket, the easy thing to do is blame one loss, Bietau said. However, that is not the case.

"People like a quick, easy way to decide," Bietau said. "They like to be able to say, 'Well, we lost this match, or if we had just won this match. We were in or out because of this.' The truth is, it's looking at the overall picture."

While the team's non-selection might not have been surprising, Jecminkova's singles selection to the bracket as one of the region's four automatic picks was unexpected, Bietau said.

"It's a great accomplishment for Alena. I really wondered if she'd make it, because she hadn't played one for a good part of the year," Bietau said. "But she's definitely a very deserving player. She's had a great April, and I think she'll have a good national."

"She's got a few injury things that will be healed up with a little bit of rest here, and some good preparation. I think she could have a real impact on the tournament."

While Jecminkova, who is not ranked among the top 100, was selected, Petra Sedlmajerova, who is ranked in the 90s, was left out.

There still is a chance for her to be selected later as one of the 40 non-automatic picks, but that scenario is unlikely, Bietau said.

"Petra is in the 90s in the rankings right now, and it's a 64 draw," Bietau said. "I don't think she'll make it in."

Sitting at home during the tournament is a sudden end to Sedlmajerova's season, which was quite successful. As a freshman, she played the No. 1 singles spot for the last three weeks of the season and was named regional Rookie of the Year.

"Petra has had a great year. There's no doubt about it," Bietau said. "I clearly think she's the best new player in the Big 12."

The reason Sedlmajerova did not make the tournament was the same as the team's non-selection: their late season performances. However, that takes nothing away from her accomplishments, Bietau said.

"I think it was inevitable that she would not be able to continue the streak that she had going," Bietau said. "I think that when things started to go wrong for her, her confidence got shook a little bit. But what a huge impact that she's had on our team this year."

Alena Jecminkova prepares to serve during one of her singles matches at Washburn Tennis Facility earlier in the season.

Students should look forward to future in K-State athletics

If all were right in the world, I would be typing this, my final column, with a mafia-size stogie in one hand and a bottle of cognac at my side, preparing to deliver a column so beautifully scripted that it embarrasses my previous seven semesters of work.

That's not the case, however. And that's also not to suggest that I'm limping to the finish line. But this will be no Jim Murray farewell. I haven't the talent nor the experience to pen such a farewell.

All I can do is try to encompass four years of K-State athletics into simple, multiple paragraph form. Everything from the memorable personality and names of Aaron Swartzendruber to Olga Firsova, the memorable — all right, infamous — careers of Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic, to even the jaw-dropping feats of Michael Bishop and David Allen.

A lot has transpired in Wildcat athletics from 1996 to 2000, with quite a lot of similarities between the bookends of my academic career. Women's rowing entered the realm of varsity sports when La Bouche was in heavy MTV rotation. Now, women's equestrian has popped into the picture.

Deb Patterson was an almost unknown commodity when she was announced as K-State's eighth women's basketball coach, while I still was adjusting to the cinder-block decor of Marlatt Hall. Now, Jim Wooldridge has the luxury of stepping into the still-simmering hot spot vacated by former men's basketball coach Tom Asbury. Oh, and he also gets to address fans still wondering, "Who is this guy?"

The football team's seemingly untouchable presence on and off the field only has continued to grow in my final weeks on campus. No one, excluding offensive lineman Thomas Barnett and his attorney, is quite sure how Leon Edwards just forgot to show up in court Tuesday to pursue kidnapping charges against Barnett. The result? Barnett gets off with only slight damages to his image and a possible NRA membership in the future.

Chris Canty can relate to this situation. He encountered the law in the weeks preceding the Cats' 1997 Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl in the form of a DUI. Although the All-

Big 12 cornerback didn't beat the rap, he did find his way into K-State's first New Year's Day bowl, which was the real battle.

This isn't to dwell on the negative side of K-State's athletic programs. There are too many good signs that overshadow the downside. Even if Wooldridge doesn't produce in the win column immediately, the thug image often associated with the basketball program should be remedied. "Coach Wooly," as he'll be referred to quite often, is on the right track. That is, slow and steady.

No true K-State sports fan is unfamiliar with the Wildcat volleyball team anymore. Head coach Jim McLaughlin's Manhattan days may be numbered, but only due to the astonishing results he continues to produce in Ahearn Field House. Minus only standout Dawn Cady when the fall season begins, McLaughlin isn't joking when he talks about a berth in the Final Four. Remember, this is coming from the man in charge of a program that produced only one Big 8 victory between 1991 and 1993.

There are many K-State programs ready to join the volleyball team's path to national prominence. Both golf programs have a big advantage with the Colbert Hills Golf Course now a reality. Cross country coach Randy Cole, the 1998 Big 12 Conference and NCAA Midwest Region Coach of the Year, has established a women's program that should remain in the top 10 year after year.

The women's tennis team took a large step forward with a fourth-place finish at the Big 12 Tournament last weekend.

Even the disheartened baseball team has a "yes we'll have it done this time" Frank Myers Field and the arrival of highly touted pitcher Jared Brite to try to right the ship in 2001.

It's a tough time to leave K-State, at least from an athletic perspective. But being a Wildcat means never having to say goodbye (Cue the music). There will be plenty of chances to follow the programs. Heck, maybe even a job that revolves around the Cats. And with that position, hopefully, a chance to witness K-State mature into a school known across the country for more than football and an embarrassing cameo in "Arlington Road." One has to believe it's possible. Look at all that's happened in four short years.

KSU women's golf looks forward to next season

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a season of progress for the K-State women's golf squad, head coach Kristi Knight said.

"We are improving, but we are not quite there yet," she said.

The season featured a variety of records, including the team shooting a tournament-best 617 for a 36-hole tournament at the Mountain View Collegiate from Feb. 18 to 20. The score was 21 strokes better than the team's previous mark of 638, set in 1998. The Cats finished sixth overall in the 10-team tournament.

Strong individual performances were turned in throughout the season. Knight spoke highly of her freshmen, Elise Carpentier and Miranda Smith.

"Elise and Miranda had some real good events," Knight said. "Both of these players will be better next season with a year of college life under their belt."

"Going into the Big 12 Championship, we were ranked 19th in the country in freshmen-impact ratings."

Carpentier said the team made strides, especially when considering its inexperience.

"We were a young team ready to face an interesting challenge, and we all gave 110 percent in order to achieve our team goals," Carpentier said. "I'm excited about next year, as I'm sure a lot of great things are coming for us."

One thing on the way for the program is the new Colbert Hills Golf Course, the team's new practice area.

"Not to take anything away from our old facilities, because they were great," Knight said. "But they didn't have all of the things that we needed."

"The team feels like it has a home now, a wonderful facility, and we are proud of it."

It also will help, Knight said, in the team's recruiting.

"We signed a high-quality recruit and a good walk on," Knight said. "Next year, if we take care of our business, should be even better than this one."

4 top recruits signed by women's rowing team

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State head women's rowing Coach Jenny Hale has announced the signing of four top recruits.

At the top of the list is 5-foot, 9-inch Samantha Allen of Mathews, Va. Last year, Allen's varsity boat won the Northern Virginia Regional Championships and both the American and Canadian Scholastic National Championship Regattas. Her boat also won the Stotesbury Cup Regatta, one of the largest high school regattas in the world.

"Samantha is an awesome young woman," Hale said. "Of all of our recruits to date, she has the most experience in high-level racing situations and has the medals and trophies to prove it."

"She is a quiet leader who has the raw material to be a great collegiate athlete. Her athleticism may allow her to step into the varsity crew as a freshman and contribute in a big way."

The next member of the new recruiting class is Grosse Pointe, Mich., native Kathryn Baxter. Baxter, a 5-foot, 8-inch member of the Detroit Boat Club, has competed in many regattas, including the American Rowing Championships and the Head of the Charles, the largest headrace in the world.

"She exemplifies the kind of attitude and experiences we look for in our recruited athletes," Hale said. "She has good size and strength, and I know she will fit in at Kansas State."

The second member of the class from Michigan is 5-foot, 11-inch Rachel Daily of Garber. Daily primarily made her name in basketball, volleyball and track. Her only rowing experience came last summer, when she won her division at the Michigan Indoor Rowing Championships.

"Rachel Daily is a tremendously athletic woman," Hale said. "I was impressed with her natural ability and feel for her stroke. She has great intelligence, and I believe will bring poise and strength to our team."

The final member of the group is Ingrid Shwaiko. In addition to rowing in high school at Arlington, Va., the 5-foot, 11-inch Shwaiko is the captain of her swim team and competes in cross country and softball.

"I can't say enough good things about Ingrid," Hale said. "Ingrid has an outstanding look on her future as a rower and is thrilled to be a part of our building effort. She will come in with great experience and will be a strong contributor to this team over her four years."

Heptathletes compete at home; other runners in Nebraska

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track team will probably get its last chance to prepare for the Big 12 Championships on May 19 with a split squad weekend that begins today in Manhattan.

The Wildcats will be host to their first meet of the season with the outdoor heptathlon. The meet will feature area heptathletes starting at 2 p.m. today. The rest of the team will compete in a quadrangular between Nebraska, Wichita State and Indiana State in Lincoln, Neb., on Sunday.

The team will meet at the Ed Weir Outdoor Track and begin the meet with field events at 1 p.m.

As the season winds down, the Cats appear to be hitting their stride with the women's team ranked No. 14 in the latest Trackwire 25, released Wednesday. Individually, five women have earned NCAA provisional qualifying marks.

The latest to qualify was Amy

Mortimer, who ran a time of 16:14.57 in the 5,000-meter relay at the Drake Relays on April 29. In addition to Mortimer, Erin Anderson, Korene Hinds, Annie Wetterhus and Rebekah Green qualified.

The K-State heptathlon continues at 11 a.m. Saturday.

STORY BY SHANNON DELMEZ

Manhattan-based band to headline Aggieville concert Saturday

Pomeroy will be caged up in Aggieville this weekend.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon will sponsor "Concert in a Cage" featuring three bands at 6 p.m. Saturday in the lot across the street from Pizza Hut in Aggieville. Pomeroy will be the headlining band, with Flybox and Yo Flaco! as the opening acts.

were friends for a while before we put the band together. We started writing a few little things. Then we ran into these two guys, Dean (Hopkins) and Chris (Davis), in 1998. John (Eitel) was added this past January."

The band's name came from the Manhattan street where it began practicing.

"Our bass player, Dean, lived on that street for a short time," Fairbanks said. "I lived on that street for a year. When the band first started getting together to practice, it was on that street. We would go to that house and practice. We liked the way it sounded."

Pomeroy then relocated to Lawrence because of the proximity to larger music scenes.

"Lawrence does have a very good music scene, but we moved partly for the music and partly because it's still close to Manhattan," Fairbanks said. "We can still keep close ties with the town that we started in. We still consider ourselves from Manhattan. We live a few miles down the road, but we wanted to relocate where we could be a little bit closer to the bigger venues that do more for bands at our level."

Davis, the band's drummer, said the band might consider relocating again.

"We might relocate to Omaha," he said. "We're doing good and selling out some shows up there, and that's where our label's based out of. We might go to Kansas City. We might stay here in Lawrence. We'll see how the summer pans out and how the album goes."

The band recently signed a one-record deal with Get Go Records of Omaha, Neb.

"They're going to pay for this album and do everything that we need," Fairbanks said. "They'll bring in a producer, cover all the costs, pay as much money as we need to get it done. Then, after they recoup those costs, we split everything down the middle."

"The next album will be distributed nationally. We're looking forward to it. We're getting in the studio in the next couple of weeks."

The band also will continue touring. The summer will include some big shows in Omaha. On May 20, it is scheduled to play at Sweetstock with Christina Aguilera, Hanson, Smashmouth, LFO and Blaque. On June 3, it will play at the People's Fair in Denver. On June 4, it is scheduled to play at the K-Rock Fest with 311, Incubus, Godsmack and Stone Temple Pilots.

"We're just really trying to travel as much as we can and keep widening the circle that we already have cut in the Midwest," Fairbanks said.

Fairbanks said while they have played more

"Concert in a Cage" tickets bought in advance at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon are $5 for 21 and older and $8 for ages 18-20.

exciting shows, one of their favorite places to play is anywhere in Manhattan, because of their fans.

Marron said Pomeroy will be playing three other Kansas shows in the next few weeks.

"On the 8th of May, we're in Lawrence for a fraternity party called Yahoo," he said. "On the 12th, we're in Wichita at America's Pub. Then Saturday — the 13th, we're in Lawrence at the Bottleneck."

Fairbanks said the band is looking forward to the Chance show Saturday as a way to say thank you to Manhattan.

"The people in Manhattan are the reason we got started and are out doing things outside of Manhattan anymore," he said. "We want to show the people of Manhattan and K-State how much that we appreciate them."

"We try to keep in touch with everybody we can. We try to do the best that we can for the people that got us where we are."

Listener-appreciation party in Topeka to feature Trace Adkins

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The 97 Country Listener Appreciation Party 2000 will be May 13 at Heartland Park in Topeka. The fifth-annual event will feature recording star Trace Adkins, said Carla Newman, promotions director for WIBW-FM 97.3.

"Trace has never been to this area, so we wanted to give the listeners a chance to see him," Newman said. "Kevin Wagner, 97 Country program director, saw him perform and said he puts on a really good show."

Adkins will sing some of his hit songs, including "There's a Girl in Texas" and "Every Light in the House is On," but he is unable to play the guitar due to an injury he received to his middle and index fingers while working on his Tennessee farm in April.

Opening at 5:30 p.m. for Adkins will be Shannon Smith, a 17-year-old from Haven, Kan., who is making her way in the country music business, Newman said. She already has opened for musicians such as Martina McBride and Kenny Chesney.

"Shannon did some interning for us last year, and she has just signed a deal with producers for a new CD," Newman said. "This girl is going to be the next LeAnn Rimes, being so young and talented."

After Smith, comedian Cledus T. Judd will be onstage. Cledus is famous for his crafty song parodies, including "Coronary Life" and "Did I Shave My Back for This?"

"Cledus is well-respected in the country music world," Newman said. "Several artists, including Trace Adkins and Shania Twain, have appeared in his videos of parody songs."

Tickets for the event are on sale for $2 at various locations and at 97 Country.

The day of the concert, they can be purchased at Mr. Goodcents in Topeka from 2 to 6 p.m. After that time, tickets will cost $20.

The concert has a number of sponsors, including Topeka Transit, which will be helping to shuttle people from the parking lot to the park.

"This is a tremendous deal, especially for $2, for a pretty good recording artist," Ron Butts, Topeka Transit general manager, said.

"We are helping out since 97 Country supported us in our Stuff the Bus event. It is a trade of goodwill."

The gates of Heartland Park will open at 2 p.m. There will be a variety of activities before the concert, especially for children due in part to the Children's Miracle Network, Newman said.

"The concert is for the listeners; we just want to thank them for listening," Newman said.

"They are the ones that make us the No. 1 radio station."

KSU basketball signs 2 more

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team has signed two more players for the 2000-2001 season, bringing the total number of signed players to six.

The program has four scholarships available, but two early signees have yet to qualify academically. E.J. Harris, a 6-foot, 3-inch point guard from Crenshaw High School in Los Angeles, and Jason Robinson, a 6-foot, 6-inch wing player from Seward County (Kan.) Community College, are the two players in question.

K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge said he expects to find out about their status by the end of May.

The two new signees are Matt Siebrandt, a 6-foot, 7-inch, 230-pound power forward who played at the College of Southern Idaho last season, and Richard Terry, a 6-foot, 3-inch guard/forward from Jacksonville (Texas) Community College. Both will be sophomores for the Wildcats next season.

Siebrandt began his career with UNLV after being named the 1998 Nevada Gatorade High School Player of the Year.

WOOLDRIDGE

He also was named the most valuable player of his community college region.

Derek Zeck, head coach at CSI, said Siebrandt has range from the three-point line but also has the ability to score in the post.

"He just has a knack for scoring," Zeck said. "He's a little undersized, but he knows how to use his body."

Zeck said he believes Siebrandt will play immediately upon his arrival at K-State, something that heavily factored into his decision to become a Wildcat.

Zeck also said Gonzaga, Oregon State and Duquesne were the other schools interested in Siebrandt.

Terry averaged 18 points and 8.2 rebounds per game while shooting 52 percent from the field last season.

JCC head coach Pat Smith said Terry continued to improve throughout last season, especially from three-point range, where he finished shooting 42 percent for the season.

"He brings a lot of offensive skills to the table," Smith said. "Probably the best part of his offensive game is the ability to score by slashing."

"He's able to get inside, drive the ball to the basket and finish plays. He's got a real good midrange game. He's able to pull up from midrange — 10 to 12 feet, and shoot the pull up jumper," Smith said.

As with Siebrandt, Smith said Terry chose K-State because of the opportunity to play immediately.

Siebrandt and Terry join Daryl Williams, a 6-foot, 5-inch guard from Pasco-Hernando (Fla.) C.C., Larry Reid, a 6-foot point guard from Northern Oklahoma Junior College, Harris and Robinson as part of Wooldridge's first recruiting class.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN GRADUATION GUIDE SPRING 2000

Chances abound to stay involved after graduation

BY KELLY EVENSON

K-State graduates have many opportunities to participate in what is going on at their alma mater.

One organization in particular offers a lifelong opportunity to participate in K-State even after graduation, said John White, director of membership and marketing for the KSU Alumni Association.

"With its many benefits, the Alumni Association is a way to continue to support the university even after becoming an alumni," White said. "This is a way to keep people in touch with what K-State academics and athletics are doing."

An annual Color K-State calendar, 15-percent discounts at the K-State Union Bookstore, guest fees and apparel at Colbert Hills Golf Course, the K-Stater magazine, childcare discounts, a 13-percent discount for Powercat Illustrated and access to Hale Library and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex all are things that alumni can take advantage of with membership to the association, White said.

"By becoming a member of the Alumni Association, students will continue to be supporting K-State," White said. "We want to give them the opportunity to stay involved in the university."

Karen Shafer, director of communications for the Alumni Association, said seven colleges and two departments will pay for the first year of membership to the association. She said membership does decline after the initial year, but 20 percent of K-State alumni are association members — the highest rate in the Big 12 Conference, not including Texas A&M University, where every alumni is a member of its association.

"There is a lot of loyalty for this university," Shafer said. "It is a good way to keep in touch with what is going on at K-State and a wonderful way to meet other alumni in your area."

Shafer said the membership cost for joining the association has decreased to $15 per year for the first five years after graduation. After the first five years, membership is $30 per year; however, discounts on life memberships are available.

Shafer said becoming an association member also allows alumni to gather to watch football and basketball games as well as continuing involvement with the university after leaving.

Catbackers link alumni, K-State athletics

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catbacker organizations number 30 clubs across the state and 80 chapters throughout the country.

Lon Floyd, director of the Catbacker clubs, said the Catbacker organization serves as a link between alumni and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. He said that while the volunteer organization has fun by having watch parties and other events, it also raises money through a summer fund-raiser.

During the event, student athletes, coaches and administration attend to meet with the public. The net profit of the fund-raiser is donated to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

Floyd said the Catbacker organization raised more than $150,000 last year.

"The Catbacker clubs are strictly voluntary, and they spend hours upon hours on preparation for fund-raisers and other events," Floyd said. "Most of the clubs have one major fund-raiser in the summer. It begins with a golf tournament, moves to a dinner and concludes with an auction."

Floyd said the purpose of the Catbackers, which was created in 1982, is not only to raise funds, but also to have a personal support group with the people of Kansas. He said all but one of the clubs are located in the state.

He said many requests have been made to create out-of-state groups, but there is neither the time nor the staff to support anything out of Kansas. The only non-Kansas club is Nebraskans for K-State in Lincoln, Neb. — one of the original charters.

"One of the major things that I see with these groups is that it is a great way for us at K-State to maintain personal contact with our members and alumni," Floyd said. "People join because they have a love for K-State athletics and enjoy participating with the coaches, administration and athletes."

Floyd said some clubs might require a minimum membership fee of about $10 to $20. He said, however, most of the expense will come from admission to events during the summers. Floyd also said many clubs provide meals and snacks for traveling teams such as rowing, baseball and basketball, when playing in their specific area.

"These clubs do many things to help support teams and organizations," Floyd said. "Catbacker clubs are covered throughout the state well and are found at all four corners. Wherever you are, you are not far away."

Another option for K-State alumni is to participate in Alumni Clubs. Bernie Haney, assistant director of in-state programs, said the clubs, which are located in Kansas and throughout the United States, get together and watch K-State sporting events and participate in other activities that allow former K-State students to get together and have fun.

"Alumni Clubs provide the opportunity for alumni to get together and share memories," Haney said. "It is a way to connect with one another because of their connection with K-State."

Haney said Alumni Clubs are free, and the only charge that might be present is a minimal cost to obtain a newsletter or attend an event. He said many of the clubs did not become present until the early 1990s, mostly, due to the recent successes of K-State football. There are 57 out-of-ticket information

For more information on the Catbacker club near you, contact Lon Floyd at 532-7707.

state and 23 in-state Alumni Clubs. "This is an exciting time to get K-Staters together," Haney said. "This is an opportunity to join to support their alma mater and to enjoy K-State."

Haney also said another goal of the Alumni Clubs is to attract prospective students to the university.

He said that if they cannot get to K-State, the clubs will bring K-State to them with updates about what is going on.

"We want to try to get prospective students to attend the in-state events," Haney said. "We want to start talking about K-State and let them know what we are doing here."

the association," Shafer said. "It is a good way to meet people, and members are also invited to watch parties, alumni events and stay in touch with what is happening at K-State."

Another way to continue involvement at the university and make a lasting impression is offered by the KSU Foundation. Diane Hinrichs, adviser for the foundation and stewardship coordinator, said graduating seniors and their families still have the opportunity to purchase a stone to be placed in the senior sidewalk.

The $50 stone will be placed in a sidewalk that will begin at the 17th Street and Anderson Avenue intersection and will run along the side of Memorial Stadium. Hinrichs said proceeds from the purchase will bring back the senior gift project. She said the student's name and college initials will be present on the stone.

"The sidewalk was created as a rejuvenation of the senior class gift," Hinrichs said. "This is a way to recognize seniors and a way for seniors to give back to the university."

Hinrichs said more than 250 stones have been purchased from both fall 1999 and spring 2000 graduations. She said the offer also has been made to parents so they can have the option of purchasing a stone as a gift for their graduating student.

"We have given the opportunity to the parents to make a donation in their students name," Hinrichs said. "We understand that many college students don't have the money for the stone, so parents now have the option to buy one as a gift."

Hinrichs said the sidewalk should begin construction in September. She said there still is time to buy a stone, but the cutoff point for donations will be in the beginning of August.

"Many people have been very receptive to this idea because it is nostalgic," Hinrichs said. "People can come back to K-State 40 years from now and see their name. It is a way to give something back."

Students need goals in job hunt

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For graduating seniors about to head into the workplace, the job market can mean a world of possibilities.

Many students are headed to jobs already, whereas others still are in the midst of trying to promote themselves to potential employers.

According to Mary Marston, assistant director and coordinator for experiential learning for Career and Employment Services, students need to have direction when searching for jobs.

"Employers are looking for people who know exactly what they want to do," Marston said.

Marston said students who have the hardest time finding jobs are the students who do not know exactly what they want to do.

"Graduates who cannot articulate to their possible employers exactly what they want to do will have a harder time," Marston said.

Bob Broeckleman, director of employment and training for Farm Credit Bank of Wichita, said the first thing he looks for in potential employees is how focused they are. "One of the first things I look for is to see if they know what they want to do," Broeckleman said.

Marston said degrees in the areas of engineering and technical fields have the most demand right now.

"Right now, engineering fields offer the most competitive and largest salaries," Marston said. "The technical field is right after it, followed by business."

Marston said although jobs in technical fields are in the most demand, the job market is tight right now and unemployment is low.

"With unemployment being so low, people in the areas of arts and sciences are getting a boost in salary," Marston said. "The tight job market is helping everyone."

Marston said students who are not going into an area of work that is in high demand have many opportunities as long as they start their job searches early.

"Freshman and sophomores have to start making sure of what they want to do and begin networking to get on the right track," Marston said.

Marston said it is easiest for students to ensure jobs upon graduation when they intern and work within their area of study.

"Eighty percent of jobs are received through networking, not through classifieds," Marston said.

Courtney Higgins, senior in accounting, said she will be starting a job with Sprint on June 26.

"I got the job because I was an intern there last summer," Higgins said. "I actually interviewed for it at the end of the summer and got it before I even came back for my senior year."

Higgins said although she is nervous, she believes she is ready to work in the real world.

"I think I am prepared and ready to go out there and work," Higgins said.

Marston said the job market can be intimidating for students, but if they prepare correctly, they can be on their way right after graduation.

"Although there are some jobs that are in more demand, there are no jobs that are terrible right now," Marston said. "What students need to do to ensure jobs is to just be focused and in control."

Union to provide graduation buffet

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Forget about making reservations and waiting in line at a restaurant.

The K-State Student Union is offering a location that is convenient and relaxing to celebrate graduation.

Cindie Snyder, marketing and promotions manager for the Union, said the Union has the semiannual Commencement Buffet to provide a nice, pleasant atmosphere for family settings.

"A lot of people have large groups that attend the graduation ceremonies," Snyder said. "All of the restaurants in Manhattan are busy, so this gives them a chance to seat their families all at one table and have a nice dinner."

The buffet, which is from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 13 in the Union Ballroom, will include carved Bourbon-sage top round of beef, lasagna Florentine, seafood bisque, garden tossed salad, homestyle potato salad, roasted garlic mashed potatoes, primavera rice pilaf, K-State Crown rolls and a dessert bar along with many other menu selections, said Brian Grove, executive chef for the Union.

Tickets are $10.95 for adults and $6.50 for children ages 5-12. Prices include tax, and reservations must be made by Wednesday.

Grove said more than 200 people are expected at this semester's buffet, and he said by having the meal option on campus, it gives families a convenient option to have a celebratory meal.

"Basically, a lot of families are on campus all at once for graduation," Grove said.

"This is a very social and celebratory kind of atmosphere, and it is a convenient time and location for most people," he said.

Snyder said she thinks the buffet is popular because it offers a wide-variety of food for everyone. She said the 24-year-old event was created because the Union saw an opportunity to offer a family setting on campus for graduation.

"I think the buffet was created to accommodate the amount of people who are on campus," Snyder said.

"Many students do not have the accommodations to serve their family at their apartments, so this gives them an option to stop by in between ceremonies and sit down to have a nice dinner," she said.

Snyder also said the convenient location has many benefits for families.

She said by having the buffet at the Union, families do not have to wait in long lines at area restaurants and can take the opportunity to sit and talk or have a tour of the campus after they are finished.

"Because of the convenient location of being on campus, students have the chance to take a walk through campus and show their family where they have been spending a majority of their time," Snyder said. "The buffet is always successful because it offers a variety of things to please all ages."

FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

Apartment next goal for grads

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The reality that an academic career soon must be replaced by a paid future is fast approaching for most graduates.

However, another worry also becomes evident — the need for a place to live.

Andrew McDonnell, director of consumer and tenant affairs at K-State, said the first thing students need to do is write everything down they want in an apartment before they begin the search.

"Before they even start looking, students need to find out what is most important to them in a place to live," McDonnell said. "They need to prioritize the features they want and then begin searching."

McDonnell said whether someone rents in Manhattan or in another city, he suggests talking to the landlord first and always looking at the apartment or house before signing a lease. He said it also is important to talk to the neighbors and people in the neighborhood to learn about the area.

McDonnell also said it is important to take a walk through the apartment to designate everything that is wrong with it before making the final decision.

"Once the lease is signed, you are in it for the length of the contract," McDonnell said. "People need to make sure to walk through with the landlord and write down everything that is wrong before you sign anything."

Sherese Hahn, property manager for McCullough Development Inc., said she suggests to first find out what price range is affordable and then decide what kind of amenities, such as dishwasher and washer and dryer, are desired.

She said everything needs to be thought about before a search is started to narrow the possibilities and make the search process easier.

"Get all of your information together first to make everything easier in the long run," Hahn said. "If you narrow down your variables first and then utilize all available resources, searching for someplace to live will be a lot better."

Hahn said the better the neighborhood and the more amenities that are included, she said always to ask about the security deposit, utilities and pets before signing the lease and to read through the lease in full before signing.

"We always try to tell them about the security deposit, where to park, and if pets are allowed when initially showing them a place," Hahn said. "People usually feel like they are getting scammed during check-out, so it is always important to check on the little things in the beginning."

Both McDonnell and Hahn said the World Wide Web is a resource that is getting a lot of use through apartment searches.

McDonnell said many sites only require people to type in the important variables, such as cost, number of bedrooms and enmities, and a list of apartments matching these criteria will appear.

Honors available for top academics

By COURTNEY DUFFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Laura Fiddick, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said she has earned semester honors for the past two semesters.

"It's cool, but it doesn't really mean anything to me. I am more concerned with my GPA than with where I sit," Fiddick said.

Students in the top 10 percent of their class who have taken at least 12 hours during the semester will be eligible to receive semester honors.

The College of Arts and Sciences generally has the most students who receive semester honors.

"Those thresholds are determined by the numbers in the classes, and those are designated by the class," said Larry Erpelding, associate dean of the College of Agriculture.

Donald Foster, director of instruction at the registrar's office, said when students receive semester honors, they have the honor recorded on their transcript.

Those with a high cumulative grade point average also can earn commencement honors. To receive the honors, students also must have completed at least 60 hours at K-State. Fifty of those hours must be graded.

Joanne Ringle, office specialist in the College of Arts and Sciences, said students with a cumulative GPA of 3.95 or above graduate summa cum laude, students in the top-3 percent of the class graduate magna cum laude, and students in the top-10 percent of their class graduate cum laude.

"I'm graduating in the honors program cum laude," Kelly Lynn, senior in English, said. "It feels good because I have worked really hard these past few years, and it's really exciting."

Ringle said the cut-off points for honors vary from college to college.

"Students from the Colleges of Arts and Sciences are competing with a lot of people," Ringle said. "It varies between the colleges."

Receiving semester or commencement honors can help students in the job market, Erpelding said.

"Some employers are going to place more emphasis on grades, and others are going to place more emphasis on leadership," Erpelding said.

Graduating senior offers final observations, advice for current students

In a sense, this is my graduation speech.

I don't think there's any chance of my being asked to enlighten a future graduating class with my knowledge of RBI Baseball and the social ramifications of "Gallagher" reruns on Comedy Central, so this is my one shot to speak to the masses before I shell out $15 more to actually receive my sheepskin (No kidding, after four years of bleeding me dry, they want more).

I really don't want to fall back on any of the traditional "Here's a passage from Dr. Seuss; this should hold ya for a couple more years"-type rant. I'm not bitter enough to use this 20-inch hole to give a world-be-damned shout out to all of Manhattan. Really, I have nothing more to offer than anyone can after an extended stay in this land of bald squirrels, three-month capri fads and endless construction ... er, campus beautification projects.

My offering: Simple observations and experiences that should be carried out or avoided before it comes time to strap on the mortar board and bid farewell. Think of them as my parting shot, because, as Bill Murray said in "Kingpin," "Big Ern is finally above the law."

n Never cross Parking Services. Its enforcers are one of us, and yet, they are not. And they possess the wrath of a thousand marmots. Once you've crossed them, they'll never forget you, and they'll go out of their way to give you a $5 treat to remind you of this.

■ Wisdom in this day and age can be found only on "The Simpsons." Every lesson one needs to learn comes from the finest family in Springfield.

■ Aggieville is an experience all should enjoy at some point in their legal/illegal driver's license phase, but there's another drinking establishment that should be visited before you abandon this town: The Gin Mill. It might be wrong of me to give this place some publicity because it's more of a local bar, but this spot has all a strapping young lad (I apologize to the ladies; it's really more of a Copenhagen crowd) could want: libations, pool tables and free popcorn. Well worth the extra mileage.

■ For GDIs only: If a guy or girl at a party ever asks you what house you're in, save yourself the embarrassment and walk away first.

■ Taco Casa's still the best deal in town.

■ An extended stay in Manhattan isn't complete without some quality time with Johnny Kaw. If you're unfamiliar with this figure, he resides in City Park at the corner of 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Johnny is nothing more than a ripoff of Paul Bunyan that was conjured up to give Manhattan some folklore. Still, the concrete giant is always good for some wisdom.

■ Don't taunt the squirrels. Much like Parking Services, they will pay you back tenfold. It's their town. We're just visiting.

■ Five dollar steak night at Rocky Ford Tavern. 'Nuff said.

■ Ladies, keep your distance from Joe Hurla. Nothing personal, but the Collegian's studious opinion editor has nine brothers and sisters. There's always a chance that he might spread his offspring-havin' frenzy to an unknowing female who comes within a 5-foot radius of the man.

■ No matter what the price, don't eat anything that you can produce internally (You all know the legend).

■ All pedestrians need to stay within the designated crosswalks. This is for your own safety. There's always a chance you could cross the path of someone whose just been accosted by Parking Services. If you're not within the designated zone, it might be the final straw.

■ It's not college unless you streak once. Or at least put one of your drunken buddies up to it.

■ When the wallet runs dry, everything you possibly need can be bought at Grand Old Trunk and Aldi.

■ A viewing of the 1980s classic "The Party Animal," available at Hastings, offers a virtual blueprint for college living.

■ Even if you're not a baseball fan, enroll in the History of Baseball. Robert Linder — or "Crocodile Bob," as he's affectionately known — incorporates both history and baseball into his class in ways that don't put you to sleep. One of the finest courses at K-State.

■ The free-speech zone outside the Union is just that. Abuse it at will.

■ And finally, don't let the Fourum turn you into a jaded, bitter person. What have we become if a 30-second message can sum up our feelings? Take the time to write down your scorn instead.

1st few months vital in post-college careers

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Developing good listening skills and identifying a mentor are two important skills graduating students should master in their first post-college job.

"You should get a sense of your organization and how things work," said Marcia Schuley, associate director of Career and Employment Services. "Learn how to communicate in different ways. Document everything — you've got to put things in writing, because it's a very different environment."

During a Career and Employment Services seminar earlier this semester, Schuley said recent graduates noticed their companies were moving to a more informal dress code and encouraged friendships in the workplace — but not romances.

"The students said relationships in their division were not looked upon well, because if you breakup with that person, then you still have to see them and work with them every day. Their employers felt strongly about this issue," she said.

Schuley said panel members were provided social situations outside of work such as softball teams and health club memberships in order to support good social habits.

Gabe Graham, Career and Employment Services panelist and Senior Product Analyst at Sprint, said the greatest adjustment was change in schedules.

"The biggest adjustment that I had to make was losing some of the freedom that comes along with being a student. Your schedule in the work force is rigid and doesn't allow as much time for leisure activities," said Graham, 1998 K-State graduate in marketing.

Graham said graduating seniors should accept a job for the enjoyment, learning experience and advancement opportunities, not the pay.

"If you are good at what you do, the pay will come. Enjoying your work will make the transition much easier. Secondly, approach your job with a willingness to learn. Employers expect that they will have to train you to do your job well. Taking a know-it-all approach will not help your transition or advancement opportunities," Graham said.

"Surviving Your First Three Months in a New Job," a 1999 article from National Business Employment Weekly, said colleagues form an image in the first 90 days. After that period, their opinion will be harder to change.

"To make the best first impression, try to be seen as one of the players. All things being equal, people prefer working with others with whom they feel a connection. Next, think about what you want to achieve in both content and context. Don't just strive to get things done. Get them done in a way that will gain you the following impact you want."

The article recommended building strong interpersonal relationships by learning colleagues' competencies and gathering information about teams and turf.

Also, the article advised exercising caution when making early friendships. Observe the obvious and subtle alliances and how others interact around the office, both in meetings and informally. Balance initiatives with working within the culture.

Students also need to start a budget if they don't already have one, said John Grable, assistant professor of family financial planning.

"All of the same principles still apply, but very few people actually do a budget and hold to it. The first thing seniors need to do after they graduate is set up some system to document where income is coming from and where they're spending money. Most likely, they'll be shocked when they see where it's going."

Grable said new graduates often make the mistake of spending heavily after they see income skyrocketing.

"It's a little misleading because people tend to spend up to what their income level is. If you're making $30,000, then you'll probably spend $30,000. If you're making $80,000, then you'll spend up to $80,000," he said. "Take it easy. Save. Don't go out and make a lot of large purchases."

Congratulations & Good Luck

May 2000
Graduates.

Past years taught lessons beyond class

In the past four years, I have struggled with classes, cut off all my hair, gone to work hung over, found and lost love, found and lost Jesus, forgotten what my natural hair color is, eaten Pizza Shuttle at 3 a.m. and believed it to be ambrosia and have cried over it all.

It has sucked it hard, and it has made me laugh until my sides ached and tears ran down my face. I have found wonderful friends in some of my professors and I have found wonderful professors in some of my friends.

I'm sure you can relate.

That is what college is for. It's about four years crammed with valuable lessons with some structured classes along the way. I came here, 18 years old, and thought I knew it all.

Gods be damned if I were going to exhibit any kind of K-State pride, because I was here to learn and not for anything else. I'll be leaving here, 22 years old, and I know I know nothing. The acquisition of knowledge has been a humbling experience.

I ended my graduation speech in high school with this line from an Indigo Girls song: "I spent four years prostrate to the higher mind, got my paper and I was free."

I thought I was pretty damn clever.

It's four years later, and I have come a long way from the idealistic little rope-sandal-wearing tree hugger I was in May 1996. There was so much I didn't know — so much I had yet to learn. I didn't understand the meaning of heartbreak. I had no idea about the simple pleasure of sipping Boulevard Unfiltered Wheat beer while watching a Royals game on television. I had no idea about the wonders of Tom Waits.

And now I know all of those things and a lot of other stuff. Most of the things I learned in classes here I never will use in any practical situation, unless a knife-wielding maniac spares my life because I can tell him the quadratic formula.

It's funny that we go to college for four years and expect something magical will happen in that time that will turn us into smart, mature adults ready to become productive members of society, when all we really do here is drink beer.

College has not been what I expected it to be, whatever that was. And now that I am graduating, I suddenly feel closer to that younger version of me than I have before, because I feel no more ready to become an adult than I was then. Only now, I am older and expected to get a real job and work and not drink every night while watching soft-core porn with my friends.

I guess I'll just go to graduate school.

OFF TO THE RACES

COLUMN BY RICHARD SMITH ■ PHOTOS BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH

Trip to Louisville, Ky., inspires beginner's guide to Kentucky Derby

As the race action heats up during open day, the Churchill Downs fans show their delight or disgust as the horses near the finish line.

I was privileged to take a trip to Louisville, Ky., last weekend and hang around during a sports journalism seminar at Churchill Downs.

It was a fascinating experience, because my closest prior experiences with horse racing were my fruitless trips to the Wichita Greyhound Park, which actually features a smaller breed of race horses, called "dogs." A weekend of seeing the full-sized versions in action and learning about the sport piqued my negligible interest in horse racing and gave me new respect for it.

Because horse racing is just between ice hockey and street luge on the interest scale for most Kansans, and there is big-time betting involved, I thought a recap of my findings from the trip would be a great chance to fulfill both of my erstwhile journalistic goals (broadening public knowledge and providing half-baked, get-rich-quick schemes) at once.

Thus, I present to you my beginner's guide to the Kentucky Derby. Feel free to clip and save for future enjoyment, and remember — I take no responsibility for any betting losses.

The history

Saturday will be the 126th running of the Kentucky Derby. The Derby is what drives Louisville. From the airport to the hotel and everywhere in between, Derby signs and paraphernalia are everywhere.

I didn't encounter a single, solitary resident who didn't make a point of saying how much he or she loves horse racing. It almost was as though the whole city had been brainwashed by the Louisville Chamber of Commerce.

To be sure, though, the Derby is no small event — it is something of a mini-Mardi Gras. It's festive atmosphere draws more than 150,000 people annually. The Derby's media guide boasts a fan base including presidents, sporting figures, musicians, movie stars and inexplicably,

Top: The twin spires, Churchill Downs' trademark, built in 1894 as part of grandstand renovations, loom in the distance as an exercise rider waits to take the track for a morning workout. The spires sit atop the oldest part of the 48,500-seat complex that stretches from the top of the homestretch to around the clubhouse turn.

Middle Right: As the sun rises on opening day at Churchill Downs, horses are washed down before and after their morning workouts. The washes consist of plain water, soap and water, and an oil-and-water mixture used to help soothe the muscles after a workout.

Bottom Right: Early morning workouts are the routine during the two weeks before the Kentucky Derby. Though horses entered in the race typically will only work out once every five to seven days. Horses pack the track during practice time preparing for the upcoming racing season.

Hammer. He must have hopped a fence or something.

The horses

A horse is a horse, of course, of course. Unless, of course, it's a Derby horse. Then it is more valuable than nine of you (or two of Jennifer Lopez). Thanks to their earning potential and the exorbitant fees involved in breeding a top horse, some of the top Derby contenders are valued at prices in excess of $4 million.

The breeding

If you want to get a $4 million, Derby-caliber horse, it will cost you quite a bit up front. About $150,000 or so should be enough to get you a horse sired by a former Derby contender who has been put out to stud.

Being put out to stud is a sweet deal for successful racehorses.

After spending the first half of their lives as Michael Jordan, they spend the second as Wilt Chamberlain. For those wanting a horse bred, well, the pun is too easy here, but suffice it to say they don't get such a good deal—the fee is nonrefundable, even if you don't get a live foal.

Incidentally, we learned there are ranchhands whose job is to manually assist the horses while they're breeding. I never thought I would find a job more sordid, humiliating and thankless than being a pro-wrestling referee. I have now.

The names

With breeding a key in evaluating a horse, foals often are named from part of the father's name and part of the mother's, to make their lineage more obvious and their name more comical and/or contradictory.

VIEWPOINT

RICHARD SMITH

To wit: Action Getter, Obsequious Potentate, Lucky Debonair, Wissahickon, Crack Brigade, Elooto and Igglhapmo. Five are real horse names, two I made up. I defy you to tell which is which.

The naming thing might be an effective sales technique, but to the untrained observer it results in a lot of names that are, technically speaking, weird as hell. I suspect a dare and many mint juleps were involved in the genesis of this naming method.

The numbers

So, out of all these impressive horses, you're going to pick the winner and get rich, right? No, actually, you're not. In fact, you'd probably do better to just bring a pair of dice than try and interpret each horse's myriad racing statistics. Sanskrit probably is simpler to pick up.

For each horse, there are records kept of its past three timed races, (both overall and at various checkpoints) their measurements, their index score and numerous other minutia. The result is a user-friendly racing guide that looks something like this: 126, 11, 5, 2 3/4, 8 9/16, 12 37/49, 2-12, 187, 3.145, 16/1

Oscillation

Right. I skipped this mumbo-jumbo and chose my only bet, by the horse's name. I chose a horse named Pure Confidence. I lost $5.

The moral? Don't bet. Ever. No method works—only through random chance can you win. And even then, you probably won't.

The inside scoop

After my extensive research and testing, my pick to win the Derby is Fusaichi Pegasus. I chose him through the time-honored method of eavesdropping on two old men eating grits in the track kitchen. They actually might have been talking about a Japanese action flick, but it's still closer to winning than I'd get on my own. So there you have it. The Kentucky Derby in a (very small) nutshell. It's a great thing to experience. Just leave your wallet at home and you'll be fine.

After returning to K-State for his class reunion, Clair Butler, 1955 alumnus and Florida resident, looks at items to be auctioned for the College of Veterinary Medicine's scholarships. Auctioned items included a basketball signed by men's head basketball coach Jim Wooldridge and a football signed by head football coach Bill Snyder.

GOING, GOING, GONE

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 300 practitioners participated in the Dollars for Scholars auction Monday night to raise money for veterinary medicine students.

All of the money raised will go directly to scholarships for students enrolled in the vet med program.

"Going to veterinary medicine school is expensive, so many of our students leave here with sizable debts," said Ronnie Elmore, professor and associate dean of veterinary medicine.

"We're doing this to try to defray their debts."

Ralph Richardson, dean of veterinary medicine, said last year's auction raised about $6,000 to $8,000, and they expected to raise about the same this year.

"We wanted to find fun ways to raise money for the vet med students," Richardson said, "and we thought this would be a fun, enjoyable thing to do."

Aside from the auction, the college also sponsored a golf tournament Monday morning, with the proceeds going toward student scholarships. Richardson said they expected to raise around last year's amount of $3,000.

The fund-raisers, which began Monday and will continue through Wednesday, are a part of an annual continuing education conference for veterinarians, mostly K-State alumni.

About 100 items, including K-State clothing, a handmade quilt, signed footballs and basketballs, wooden crafts, medical equipment and various animal products, were auctioned to participants. All items were donated by friends and family of K-State faculty.

Jim Wooldridge, head men's basketball coach, started the evening by introducing his assistant coach, Charles Baker, and speaking about K-State and the basketball program.

He said he always felt a connection to K-State and encouraged everyone to support the basketball team.

The way to get people's support back, he said, is to win. In regards to having a winning program, he spoke of pride, passion and hard work.

Richardson said they asked Wooldridge and Baker to attend the auction for several reasons.

"They are a part of the K-State family," he said, "and we wanted to welcome Wooldridge. Also, vet people are pretty aggressive and avid about K-State programs, no matter what it is, but especially about sports."

After Wooldridge spoke, the September Four quartet provided entertainment before the barbecue dinner.

Bidding began after dinner. The first item auctioned was a $95 football signed by Bill Snyder. A wooden rocking horse carved by a former K-State faculty member sold for $225.

David Whetstone, 1993 alumnus, won the horse and said he had planned his bids for it.

"I just told myself I would prob-

Veterinary Medicine raises funds for student scholarships with auction, other fund raisers ably pay $200," he said. "When I got there, I didn't want to stop."

Whetstone said he wanted the rocking horse because he and his wife are expecting their first child, and because the faculty member who carved it was a professor of theirs when they attended K-State.

Whetstone said he was glad to pay the money not only because he received a sentimental gift for his family, but because of its cause.

"It's a lot easier paying that much money knowing it's going toward scholarships," he said.

He said he liked the idea of raising money for vet students' scholarships because of the large debt they incur while going to school.

"Veterinarians all over are starting to recognize that hardship," Whetstone said.

Finished with school and going out into the real world in the fall, Angela is using the Collegian to keep her busy so as not to miss her boyfriend Cory Roberts while he is away at Field Training for the Air Force ROTC.

Moving to upper management after two years on the sports desk to whip "sports is not news" people into shape. Goal is to eventually fill every page of the Collegian with sports (news) coverage.

Sarah is a peerless navigator and tireless worker, often going weeks without sleep in her never-ending pursuit of truth and justice. Her dedication is balanced by the fathomless pride she takes in her job and herself. She spends so much time working on genuine news that she doesn't even have time to write her own bio paragraph.

Last survivor of a doomed planet, Ken uses his cotton-sharp intellect, sharpened by a decade of higher education, to feed squirrels, read comic books and try to start his car. He has been allotted 13 minutes of sleep this summer. The T-shirt is by Dighton Select, the hair is by Roger of New Bedlam, and the ensemble shows he is getting ready for fall while holding onto spring.

No one asks Becky about the desk any more. They do, however, ask her about just about everything else, and she tries to answer them, no matter how much it pains her. If you see her, offer to buy her a soda. She likes that.

Air Force ROTC is an elective -- but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation -- as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try -- you won't regret it.

Braves demote Rocker to minor league

By PAUL NEWBERRY

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — John Rocker was sent down to the minors Monday, one day after he angrily threatened the reporter who wrote the story in which the Atlanta reliever disparaged gays, minorities and foreigners.

Rocker, who has struggled with his control since returning from a two-week suspension for the remarks in the article, was optioned to the Braves' Triple-A club in Richmond.

Rocker also was fined for Sunday's confrontation with Sports Illustrated reporter Jeff Pearlman, said manager Bobby Cox.

He would not elaborate, but a baseball source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the amount was $5,000.

Cox insisted Rocker's demotion was unrelated to the confrontation and was because of the reliever's inability to throw strikes.

He has walked 25 batters in just 18 1/3 innings this season, and Cox has pulled him from several games because of control problems.

"This is something that's been brewing for a while," Cox said. "We've been bailing him out. It couldn't go on like that forever."

Rocker has 10 saves since rejoining the team May 18 but also has struggled with his control, issuing 25 walks in 18 1-3 innings. His ERA is 3.85.

The demotion to Richmond has the potential to cost Rocker millions if he remains in the minor leagues for 20 days or more.

While the Braves gave him a $290,000 salary this year, he probably would get $3 million or more in arbitration instead of the $300,000 to $400,000 he would receive if Atlanta can unilaterally determine his salary.

Former football player arrested on gun charges

By JOSHUA KINDER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State running back Joe Hall will be in court Thursday to defend the charge of criminal use of a weapon.

Hall was arrested June 1 at Silverado Saloon for carrying a concealed weapon.

A Riley County Police Department spokeswoman said police responded to an unrelated call from Silverado at 12:52 a.m. and saw a Hi-point .40-caliber handgun in Hall's back waistband.

The spokeswoman said Hall told the police the gun was taken from his apartment two days earlier, and while he was at Silverado he found the individual who took the gun and got it back.

This is Hall's second run-in with the law in the past seven months. In November, he was issued a notice to appear for a minor in possession of alcoholic liquor charge.

Hall, who has one year of playing eligibility remaining, was dismissed from the football team at the end of the 1999 season for academic reasons.

4 drivers at fault in 5-vehicle pileup on Anderson Avenue

By DANICA COTO

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A five-car pileup occurred at the intersection of Anderson Avenue and 14th Street on Monday afternoon.

All five cars were in the right lane going west on Anderson Avenue when a 1991 Geo Storm, driven by Brandy Bush, senior in psychology, slowed down.

She was hit from behind by Chirag Patel, senior in management information systems, who was driving a 1990 Mitsubishi Eclipse.

Following Patel were three other vehicles that hit each other: a 1982 GMC truck, a 1993 Ford Taurus and a 1989 Dodge Spirit.

All four drivers were issued a citation for following too closely," Riley County Police officer Darla Gee said.

"We don't recognize fault," Gee said. "We look at traffic infractions."

"It all happened in a matter of seconds," Tara King, Manhattan resident who was driving the truck, said.

King said she was hit from behind by two cars.

Gee said King might be issued an additional citation for inattentive driving because she was reaching down to change the radio station before the accident occurred.

Gee said drivers have to leave a reasonable amount of space between their car and the one in front of them.

"Four people were following too close to each other," she said.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women's Alpine Team Diet

During the non-snow off season of the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members used the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right--20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important) while reducing. You keep "full" - no starvation - because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home (For men too!)

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientifically proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today, tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $8.95 - add 0.50 cents RUSH service to: MIDWEST ASSOCIATES, 3818 S. Glenstone, Suite 308, Springfield, MO 65804. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do. ©1999

COLLEGIAN CHANGES TO TABLOID, PUBLISHES 3 ISSUES EACH WEEK

It's summer time, and as the campus changes a little bit, so does the Collegian. As everyone probably noticed when they picked up the Collegian today, it is smaller.

During the summer, the Collegian changes from a broadsheet to a tabloid format.

In the past two summers, the tabloid format also has had a column of fringe on the outside of each page.

After many complaints throughout the past two summers that it was hard to read, this summer Collegian will not have that column.

Also, because during the summer there isn't as much news as the fall and spring semesters, the Collegian is printed only three times a week — Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Along with city and campus news, features and Associated Press articles, readers will get a dose of the Collegian columnists on Tuesday, information about sports and recreation at K-State and around Manhattan on Wednesday and information about events happening over the weekend on Thursday.

During the summer, sometimes stories are hard to find, so that is where our readers come in.

If anyone has a story idea, feel free to call in to the Collegian at 532-6556 and give us your ideas.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

PIZZA PRIVILEGE

Americans taught to waste, confuse luck for rights

It was really good pizza. It had broccoli, tomatoes, black olives, mushrooms, green peppers and even sliced almonds. Between the three of us, we ate all but one slice of it. The waitress came by and asked us if we wanted a box, and blissfully sated, we all looked at one another for a decision. We decided to take the triangle box, and the slice fit perfectly. So cute.

None of us actually cared whether the single slice of really good pizza accompanied us as we continued to walk around Westport in Kansas City, Mo. We didn't need it, because we were blissfully sated, and it was only one piece — something none of us would've hesitated to leave behind. But it was so damn good, and it had sliced almonds, and because it was so damn good with these sliced almonds, we decided to take it.

I've never really thought twice about not taking home the little bit of food that is sometimes left over when one eats out with friends. It's usually just a little bit, maybe enough for a small snack for one person and probably not worth the bother of packaging. This all came crashing down on my head Sunday, when we left the pizza place and were asked by a woman — presumably homeless — for some change.

We kept walking for maybe two steps, then stopped. I looked at the triangle box in my hand in which that leftover piece of really good pizza had fit so perfectly — the box with which I had become quickly annoyed because I didn't want to carry it around — and heard myself asking this woman if she wanted some pizza. She gratefully accepted it and thanked us. She disappeared, and we continued walking.

I was ashamed of myself. Ashamed of the nonchalance with which we decided to take this food with us, as if our supply of food was endless and always will be. Ashamed that I could've even considered leaving perfectly good food behind, just to get thrown away. Ashamed that I wouldn't have had anything to offer that woman if my whim would've favored leaving the food at the restaurant.

As an American, I've been taught that it's OK to leave food on my plate, to scrape it into the trashcan if I couldn't finish it. I've been taught that there will always be more food, that I will never go hungry, no matter what. As an American, I've been taught to be wasteful, and that it's OK.

I shouldn't confuse luck and privilege with rights. I don't eat because I have the right to; I eat because I am lucky to be able to.

Some people aren't so lucky.

Columnist unsuccessfully attempts to rid of the Fear, learns life lesson

I've been gripped by the Fear.

Graduate school is nothing more than one big, long, ever-increasing anxiety attack. Add to this the normal stresses of life (e.g., being financially strapped, early onset of male-pattern baldness, stink-foot and a real painful hangnail) and by spring semester's end I was in near-panic paralysis.

One morning this past April, I was driving to school trying to choke down the Fear when a squirrel ran across my traffic lane. It had nearly made it to the other side of the street when it caught sight of my vehicle barreling down the road. Catching the Fear, the squirrel darted back into the street and straight under my front wheel. I didn't mean to kill it. It was inadvertent.

I had been successful containing the Fear deep within, but come mid-April it started oozing out and infesting the world around me. It wouldn't be long until all of Manhattan caught the Fear and would be transformed into nothing more than a gray dead-zone.

It was literally a lifesaver when my mother asked if I would accompany her on her business trip to Hawaii. I thoroughly needed to get away from Kansas and the Fear. I figured Hawaii is a good place, being it's about as far away as I could get without a passport.

The Hilton Waikoloa Village Resort, the site of my mother's biomaterials conference and the place where we sojourned, was extremely nice if you like extreme ostentation. Constructed on the seaward edge of an old lava flow, there was no other structure nor plant nor nothing but a black lava field surrounding the resort for about 11 miles in any direction.

The resort was an isolated, extremely planned out, self-contained fantasy playland, and the Hilton did an excellent job making it such.

Never-never land was quite enjoyable for a while, but by Tuesday I was starting to feel a bit stir crazy. Don't get me wrong — sitting by a pool in Hawaii looking at the innards of a Hilton is definitely more desirable than looking at one's failed results of a two-week long experiment in a windowless biochemistry lab, but even still, after a while my mind couldn't help but drift back to contemplating the Fear from which I was trying to escape.

So early Tuesday morning I loaded up two days worth of crap into the rental vehicle, kissed Mom good-bye, and headed out: first to the beer store, then to wild Hawaii.

Living on nothing but beer, caffeine pills and the unique Hawaiian delicacy of Spam musubi (don't ask), I did the blitzkrieg tour of the island's 11 different climatic zones.

Among the places I visited were the 13,796-foot summit of Mauna Kea, a pool fed by a volcanically heated spring, and a clothes optional black-sand beach with an undertow vicious enough to strip the paint of a car (I was in serious fear that I was going to be swept out to sea and that some polar scientist was going to find my dead, naked body washed up on the shores of Antarctica).

VIEWPOINT
DAVID LEVIN

I returned to the resort just in time for biomaterial conference's luau: an all-out affair, which included a pig cooked in an imu (a large cooking pit, not the large flightless bird), poi (steamed taro root pounded into a purple paste that tastes like purple paste), highly choreographed Polynesian dancing complete with women in grass skirts and coconut bra cups, and an open wet bar.

By the time the luau concluded, I felt kind of beat up from two days' worth of sun, surf, altitude, dehydration and alcohol toxicity.

Still undergoing the effects of one too many caffeine pills coursing through my circulatory system and knowing that I'd be unable to go to sleep, I figured a good sit in a hot tub might due the relaxing trick.

As I crossed the bridge over the Japanese goldfish pond on my way towards the hot tub, I spied a gecko sitting by a light, waiting to eat whatever insect would happen by.

I pondered the gecko for a bit. Just as I'm sure the gecko was pondering me back. In want of a closer inspection, I reached out to grab the lizard, but it too caught the Fear. As I tried to cup the creature in my hand, the gecko slipped through my fingers, ran over the top of the bridge and, in its escape, leaped into the darkness, landing directly into the pond, whereupon it was instantaneously swallowed by a orange-and white-blotched koi.

It was not my intent to be the instrument of the gecko's demise. I didn't realize that the Fear was still within me and still on the spread.

This whole experience enlightened me to two things: 1) Getting eaten by a large ornamental fish or run over by a passing car is one, if not the most desirable, way of putting an end to the Fear. And 2) The Fear follows everywhere. One might try and escape it for a week or so geographically or through drink, but the reality that created it in the first place still exists.

The knowledge that reality patiently awaits one's return is just one more thing now that adds to the Fear.

Clinton visits Ukraine during tour

By TOM RAUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine — Fourteen years after the world's worst nuclear accident, Ukraine President Leonid Kuchma ordered the Chernobyl nuclear power plant closed, drawing praise from President Clinton, who dispensed $80 million in American aid to entomb the plant forever.

"This is a hopeful moment," Clinton said. "It is also a moment when we remember those who suffered as a result of the accident there."

The April 26, 1986, accident spread radioactive material over much of Europe. The Ukrainian government has blamed the disaster for at least 8,000 deaths, including 31 killed immediately, many more killed in the cleanup operation and others who later died of cancer and other radiation-related illnesses.

The plant will close on Dec. 15, Kuchma said. The U.S. Energy Department said it will help find replacement sources of electricity.

Earlier, in Moscow, Clinton used an address to the Duma, the lower house of the Russian parliament, to criticize the Kremlin's crackdown in Chechnya. And he paid a nostalgic visit to former Russian President Boris Yeltsin at his dacha on the outskirts of Moscow.

"Yeltsin looked good," Clinton told reporters on Air Force One on the way to Kiev.

The money Clinton pledged will help contain radiation from the reactor, with $2 million earmarked for improving safety at Ukraine's other nuclear power plants. It comes atop about $200 million the United States already has spent to improve nuclear safety in Ukraine.

The new money will go toward repairing a cover, or sarcophagus, which was built after the disaster but now is considered unstable. During his half-day visit, Clinton announced steps to open the door to expand U.S. cooperation with the country's struggling space program and a $25 million program for small- and medium-sized Ukrainian businesses.

"America will stand by you as you fight for a free and prosperous future," Clinton told tens of thousands of people, many waving Ukrainian and American flags.

In Moscow, Clinton became the first U.S. president to address the Russian parliament.

"We are not destined to be adversaries, but it is not guaranteed that we will be allies," Clinton told Russian lawmakers.

His 50-minute speech drew mostly polite applause, although several dozen sat impassively.

Ultrationalist leader Vladimir Zhirinovsky shouted before and after Clinton's speech and muttered audibly several times during it. "Shame! Whom are you applauding?" Zhirinovsky asked.

Clinton said he hoped Russia would take advantage of recent economic growth — due largely to higher oil prices — to create a more diversified economy. He offered U.S. support should Russia seek to join the World Trade Organization.

*Use Your Thinking Cap!

If you don't spend much time contemplating underground power lines, you're probably not alone. After all, out of sight, out of mind, right? Well, it's time to change your thinking. Underground lines may seem invisible, but the danger is real.

Electrical accidents usually happen when you're not even thinking about electricity. Like when you're digging a fence post or planting a tree.

So, before you pick up a shovel or operate a backhoe, do something that could save your life. Call the Kansas One-Call Underground hotline at 1-800-DIGSAFE. They'll come and show you where you can dig — and where you can't. So you'll be sure there's nothing down there but dirt. If you have questions or concerns about your electric service, just give us a call at 1-800-794-6101. What should you remember about underground power lines? Two things: think twice, put safety first.

Country music singer Rick Trevino featured Saturday evening in Manhattan's annual Arts in the Park series at City Park

By NANCY FOSTER

Music filled the air, blankets covered the grass and feet tapped the ground as country singer Rick Trevino performed in the kick-off concert for Arts in the Park 2000.

The music sent one couple to the dance floor many times.

"I loved it," said Arthur Hires, who danced to several songs with his fiancée. "It was one of my favor-ite stars and you don't get to hear too many free concerts."

jazz.

"Old bands that have retired show up and play for us or local bands who are trying to get hits," Kris Kanode, lighting technician and stage hand, said.

"Sometimes we have karaoke."

The concerts begin at 8 p.m. and last up to two hours.

"Most have a good time and stay all night," Kanode said.

This was the case with Trevino's fans.

He opened the concert with his hit song "Doctor Time," and throughout the night played other hits such as "Learning As You Go," "She Can't Say I Didn't Cry" and "Running Out of Reasons."

After playing for more than an hour and 15 minutes, he left the stage. He was soon brought back by the cheering crowd, which filled the stands, benches and lawn.

After one encore, fans cheered Trevino on to play another encore, ending the night with "Great Balls of Fire" by Jerry Lee Lewis.

Hires said he loved Trevino because of his character.

"He's such a good-natured fellow," he said.

During the concert, Trevino joked with the audience about being a free babysitter when about 20 children danced and played games in front of the stage.

"It's a very family-oriented atmosphere," Eric Laune, sound engineer, said.

Kanode said although Arts in the Park had taken place for many years, one thing was new this year.

"This year, we're having a concession stand," he said.

In addition to the concession stand, country radio station KXBZ-FM 104.7 was also there. Kanode said depending on what music was playing that night, a radio station was usually there broadcasting.

Kanode said the concerts usually drew a decent-sized crowd.

"Basically, it's for the city and anyone who wants to show up," he said. "It's good to come. It keeps your kids out of trouble, and you have fun."

The concerts will last through Aug. 5 and will

Wagnon files for re-election

By JOHN HANNA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A State Board of Education member who strongly opposes new science standards that de-emphasize evolution has filed for re-election, and a board member who supported the standards has an opponent.

Board member Bill Wagnon, a Topeka Democrat, said he believes evolution will be the biggest issue in his re-election campaign and in other board races. Wagnon went Monday to the secretary of state's office to complete the paperwork necessary to put his name on the ballot.

Board members serve four-year terms, and five seats will be filled in the November general election. Members in four of the five districts are running for re-election; three supported the new science standards, and Wagnon opposed them.

Roger Rankin of Longton, who filed and is an opponent of the GOP primary, said the board should have accepted work from its committee of science educators. The committee drafted standards that described evolution as a fundamental tenet of science, but the board's 6-4 majority didn't take up the plan, choosing to write its own standards.

"I don't feel the board really listened to them," Rankin said. "It's about time we in education start listening to the people in the trenches, teaching."

The board's new science standards, approved in an August vote, brought the state national and international attention — and strong criticism from many scientists.

Wagnon has been vocal in criticizing the standards.

"It's awfully important to raise interest in state board races in a way that's never been done before," he said after filing. "This is an issue most people can relate to."

The board decided last year to rewrite its old science standards because members saw them as too vague. The new standards are being used to create statewide student assessment tests starting next spring.

The standards do include "microevolution," the theory that species change over time to adapt to their environments.

But not included as a subject for testing was "macroevolution," the theory that different species — most notably apes and man — evolved from common ancestors.

Also missing is the big-bang theory, which states the universe began with the explosion of a superdense, primeval atom and has been expanding ever since.

Kris Van Meteren, executive director of the conservative Kansas Republican Assembly, said the hysteria surrounding the board's decision is turning into support.

As for Wagnon, Van Meteren said, "He may wind up being surprised if he runs on that issue and that issue alone."

In addition to Steve Abrams, two other board members who supported the standards are running for re-election and face primary opponents: Linda Holloway, of Shawnee, and Mary Douglass Brown, of Wichita.

Turkish, U.S. agents meet to question Iranian defector

By AYLA JEAN YACKLEY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANKARA, Turkey — U.S. and Turkish agents were questioning an Iranian defector who said he has evidence that Tehran planned and financed the bombings of Pam Am Flight 103 and a U.S. military barracks in Saudi Arabia, reports said Monday.

The defector, who identified himself as Ahmad Behbahani, told the CBS news program "60 Minutes" that he was a senior intelligence official and has documents to prove his claim that Iran was behind the bombings.

Iran has not issued an official response. But the hard-line daily Tehran Times said Monday that Behbahani is a member of the outlawed Iranian opposition group Mujahadeen Khalq. The group denied the claim.

Two Libyans are on trial before a Scottish court in the Netherlands for the 1988 bombing of the Pam Am jetliner over Lockerbie, Scotland, which killed 270 people — most of them Americans.

Law experts said Behbahani's statements were unlikely to affect the outcome of the trial.

The 1996 truck bombing of Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia killed 19 U.S. Air Force personnel.

Turkey's National Intelligence Agency confirmed that its agents and agents of a foreign secret service had interrogated a man it identified as Seyyid Behbahani. It did not identify the foreign agency, but newspapers said that Behbahani was questioned by the CIA. There was no official explanation for the discrepancies in the first names, but an Iranian expert said Behbahani, as an intelligence officer, traveled under different names.

"Behbahani, who was seen as suspicious, has been interviewed by our agency," the Turkish intelligence agency said in a statement carried by the Anatolia news agency. "In his initial testimonies, he said he worked for a while at the Iranian Intelligence Ministry and escaped from Evin prison where he was imprisoned in 1998 for spying on behalf of a foreign country," the statement said.

Regents to vote on tuition increases

BY SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students attending a public university in Kansas can expect to pay more during the 2001-2002 school year if the Kansas Board of Regents pass the proposed tuition increase.

This increase in tuition would be the third in less than a year. Sue Peterson, assistant to K-State President Jon Wefald, said the reason for the increase in tuition to balance tuition fees with teachers' salary requests when compared to K-State's peer schools.

Peterson said if the state wants to increase faculty salaries at state institutions, it is going to have to raise tuition to help compensate. With faculty salaries being fairly low at state institutions and tuition fees also comparatively inexpensive, to increase one will likely mean an increase in another, she said.

"We're looking at those in tandem if you will," Peterson said.

Peterson said keeping faculty salaries competitive, which helps ensure quality educators, is a No. 1 priority at K-State.

However, she also explained the increase from the legislature's perspective.

"The policy makers in Topeka are saying you need to use the state consistently," Peterson said. "If your tuition is not going to be comparable to peers, then it's hard for us to help you fund the faculty's salaries comparable to peers."

The nine-member Board of Regents is expected to make a decision June 22 in Topeka.

Should the increase be approved, tuition rates at four-year public universities would increase 3 percent for Kansas residents. Non-resident tuition rates would increase by $6 per credit hour.

To help soften the tuition-increase blow, included in the proposition is a $1.8 million-per-year increase for three years to the state comprehensive grant program.

Man uses helicopter to escape

By KARIN MEADOWS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANTOWN, Fla. — An inmate at a center for sex offenders made a daring escape Monday at 1 p.m. in a helicopter that landed on the grounds and whisked him away before crashing in an orange grove nearby.

The helicopter cleared a 15-foot razor-wire fence surrounding the Martin Treatment Center, then went down about 100 yards away, authorities said.

But the inmate, Steven Whitsett, 28, and the pilot, Clifford Sebastian Berkhart, 23, ran off.

The two are considered armed and dangerous because two empty gun holsters were found beside the wreckage.

Whitsett had been convicted in 1994 of child molestation and finished his prison sentence in 1999. He was being held at the treatment center while awaiting a civil trial under a law aimed at keeping dangerous sexual offenders locked up even after they finish their sentence.

The treatment center is about 35 miles northwest of West Palm Beach. Guards at the treatment center are not armed. But guards at the prison nearby have weapons and are responsible for security at the treatment center.

Manhattan's EXPANDING NIGHTLIFE

Offering at Rusty's to experiment with nonsmoking

By JIM REINTJES

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rusty's Next Door will become the first nonsmoking bar in Manhattan and possibly in the state of Kansas when it opens next month in the bar formerly known as Skips.

"That's what I've been told," Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon said regarding the possibility of having the first nonsmoking bar in Kansas.

Wilson said he plans to open Next Door on July 1.

"Next Door will be a much nicer facility," he said. "After years and years of abuse, everything will be brand new."

Wilson said Next Door will have a rustic look like Chance.

"It will have wood walls, ceramic tiles on the floors and a lot of TVs," Wilson said. "It will be a new rustic look."

Next Door will be a place for nonsmokers to go, Wilson said.

"It will mainly be directed as a socializing place," he said.

Next Door will be separate from Chance. There will be an entrance to Next Door in the front patio area of Chance.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said Wilson will do a great job with Next Door.

"He always does a nice job, and I am excited to see what he will do," Sieben said. "It will be something different."

Wilson said the fact that Skips was an underage bar was a factor in its going out of business.

"There is no revenue from people just hanging out," Wilson said.

He said underage people don't respect the fact that they have a place to go.

"They have a place to go, get caught and don't have a place to go, and then the bar gets caught and that's too bad for the bar."

Unlike former occupants Skips and KJ's, Next Door will have no cover charge.

Wilson said having a nonsmoking bar will be an experiment, and he also said he hopes the non smokers will support Next Door.

"If it doesn't work we will just take the non smoking sign down and go," Wilson said.

"If you don't like it at this place, hopefully you will like it at the other place."

Safari Jack's to fill hole left in Aggieville by Lucky's exit

By NANCY FOSTER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As a result of more than 15 liquor violations, Lucky BrewGrille will no longer be a part of Aggieville.

Lucky's was required to close its doors June 1 after reaching a settlement with the Kansas Department of Revenue.

As part of the agreement, the establishment was required to pay $4,350 in fines, which was reduced by agreeing to have its liquor license revoked.

Due to the violations Lucky's incurred under Kansas' Liquor Control Act, Scott Holeman, communications director for the Alcohol and Beverage Control, said one thing was certain.

"They will not be eligible for a liquor license in the state of Kansas," he said.

As a result, a new bar and restaurant, Safari Jack's Watering Hole, will be taking its place.

The bar will have a dance-format design and a safari theme on the inside, with a disc jockey booth on the second floor.

"The highlight will be that there will be around 60 African animals displayed on the inside," Jeff Mathis, co-partner of Safari Jack's, said.

Mathis said he and his partner have been working hard to get the bar finished quickly.

"We're working hard on it now, six days a week until around 10 or 11 at night, trying to get it done," Mathis said.

Safari Jack's will be open to anyone age 21 and older and is scheduled to open July 15.

Public smoking ban still under discussion

■ Commission working on ordinance proposed by university students.

By WENDY SCHANTZ

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commission members discussed a possible city ordinance May 23 that would ban smoking in public places. However, it will be weeks before such an ordinance is drafted and debated.

"There's no proposal yet," Carol Peak, city commissioner, said. "When we have something on paper, then people will be able to talk about it."

Jason Heinrich, former student body president, first introduced the proposal to Student Senate on Feb. 3.

He said the idea started after the Culligan Holiday Bowl in San Diego.

"It's a California state ordinance to not have smoking in public places," Heinrich said.

"A bunch of alumni and students approached me and said, 'Hey, you guys should look into this.' So we did."

Heinrich said that although the issue was controversial, he wanted to present it and see what happened.

"We hoped that by first raising the issue, we'd get some debate and see what kind of response we'd get from the city," Heinrich said. "Being optimistic, we hoped it would pass in some form."

Greg Bollenbach, manager at Bobby T's Bar & Deli, said it is not possible to predict if bars and restaurants will lose business if they are forced to go smoke-free.

"I don't want to say it will hurt sales, but it will definitely hurt some people," Bollenbach said.

"Those who come in for a drink and want to smoke won't be here as much, but there might be 150 people who don't normally come out because of the smoke."

About 80 percent of the bar's customer base are smokers, Bollenbach said.

"The ideal situation would be to allow each individual business owner to make the decision," he said.

"Because if non-smoking bars are such a great thing, why don't we have any in Manhattan now?"

Peak said it is hard to predict what will happen to the idea from here.

"Based on what other communities have seen, the response has been generally positive," Peak said. "We'll have to just wait and see."

Brandon Ham, senior in business administration and finance, and Alec Coughlin, senior in political science, talk at the University Commons pool on Monday. In addition to individual apartment complexes having pools, the city of Manhattan has four public pools.

Summer heat gets students outside

As the temperature rises, summer happenings around Manhattan multiply.

Several area locations feature outdoor activities to enjoy during the long, summer days.

Tuttle Creek State Park, four miles north of Manhattan, is a busy spot during the summer months.

"The water-based activities seem to be the most popular with college students," Steve Prockish, park ranger, said.

Boating, sunbathing and using the beach area are activities Prockish said are students' favorites. Water-skiing, swimming, sand volleyball, camping, picnicking, hunting and fishing are all options at Tuttle Creek.

An 18-hole disc golf course was added to Tuttle Creek in November, making it the first state park system to have such a course.

There are new hiking trails open in the Tuttle Creek Spillway area, and a shooting range is a recent addition to the park.

Pillsbury Crossing, a flat-rock area, is a 100-foot-wide, mile-long stretch of state-managed property, off Interstate 70 east of Manhattan.

"Pillsbury is a great place to just get away and spend time with your friends," Brett Burton, junior in business administration, said.

Public swimming pools in Manhattan include CiCo Park Swimming Pool, City Park Swimming Pool, Douglass Park Swimming Pool and Northview Park Swimming Pool.

Volleyball courts are available at City Park, and CiCo Park offers tennis courts. Both parks have jogging paths.

Frank Anneberg Park, containing jogging paths and a large pond with fish, is also available.

Wildcat Creek Sports Center, located by Frank Anneberg Park on Anderson

Avenue, offers outdoor recreation activities. The center contains a nine-hole golf course, miniature golf, a driving range, sand volleyball and batting cages.

Jonathan Fateley, Wildcat Creek Sports Center owner, said the golf course is the most popular college-student activity.

"Students often come play after class," Fateley said. "It's a quick course that doesn't take an entire afternoon."

The driving range and miniature golf are other options Fateley said K-State stu-

Sunset Zoological Park features a new outdoor amphitheater with seating for more than 150 people. The zoo is located on Oak Street near Manhattan High School. Sunset Zoo houses the largest outdoor chimpanzee exhibit in Kansas. The world's largest lizard species, the Komodo dragon, is on exhibit this summer at the zoo.

Zoo Trail, part of the Linear Park trails, is a natural hiking path that is sheltered by native woodlands. This steep, narrow trail begins north of the Sunset Zoo parking area. Linear Park Trails has entrances at Frank Anneberg Park, Richards Drive, Pecan Circle, South Manhattan Avenue, Blue River Recreational Area and Casement Road. Linear Park contains more than 10 miles of trails.

Adoption contract changes raise concerns for children

LAWRENCE — Community mental health centers will take over services next month for 1,500 children in state custody awaiting adoption. The move has some experts worried abused children will be removed from therapists with whom they have developed trusting relationships.

The Kansas Children's Service League was awarded the state's $20 million adoption contract earlier this year, and the company contracted with Mental Health Consortium for several mental health services.

Fire early Monday morning leaves 3 Kinsley people dead

KINSLEY, Kan. — Fire swept through a home in this central Kansas town, killing three people inside, officials said.

The fire early Monday morning was probably set by a mattress that was over a floor furnace, Ken Schmidt, Edwards County Undersheriff, said.

The bodies of Thaleana Jolliff, 22, who finished moving into the house with her fiancé on Sunday, and a friend of the couple, Dustin Putter, 17, were identified Tuesday, Schmidt said.

Authorities were still awaiting positive identification on the third body.

Judge orders killer's release from state mental hospital

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A paranoid schizophrenic who killed a Kansas City, Mo., woman can leave a state mental hospital, a Jackson County judge has ruled.

Circuit Judge Jay A. Daugherty told lawyers Monday that Gary Rawlings Jr., 41, must be released.

In 1987, Rawlings shot his 23-year-old girlfriend as she slept. He was found not guilty by reason of insanity.

He will be sent to a Kansas City, Mo., group home, where staff will monitor his movements and medication.

Worth of tobacco industry estimated to be $157 billion

MIAMI — The nation's five biggest cigarette makers are worth $157 billion domestically and have a "strikingly rosy" future, a financial expert testified Tuesday for smokers seeking punitive damages from the tobacco industry.

George Mundstock, a professor of finance at the University of Miami law school, said the tobacco companies could raise that amount in six months by Wall Street borrowing or selling themselves.

Strong earthquake shakes rural Turkey; at least 2 killed

ORTA, Turkey — A strong earthquake struck rural central Turkey on Tuesday, collapsing homes and killing two people, including a beekeeper crushed to death by falling stones as he slept.

Man who stabbed Harrison to stand trial in November

OXFORD, England — The man accused of trying to murder former Beatle George Harrison and his wife was ordered Tuesday to stand trial in November.

Michael Abram of Liverpool is charged with attempted murder in the Dec. 30 attack on the Harrisons at their home in Henley-on-Thames, west of London.

Workers let go at World's Fair after decreased ticket sales

BERLIN — They're not staying too long at Germany's first-ever World's Fair — in fact, they're just not coming.

Just days after Expo 2000 opened to much hoopla in the central city of Hanover, organizers have broken their silence about disappointing ticket sales and are even having to let some workers go.

1 person injured after Serbs clash with NATO peacekeepers

GRACANICA, Yugoslavia — Serbs angry over a grenade attack swarmed around a British general Tuesday, prompting his bodyguards to fire into the crowd, escalating tension in a community increasingly restive over NATO's inability to protect it. One person was injured.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women's Alpine Team Diet

During the non-snow off season of the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members used the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right--20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important) while reducing. You keep "full" - no starvation - because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home (For men too!)

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientifically proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today, tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $8.95 - add 0.50 cents RUSH service to: MIDWEST ASSOCIATES, 3818 S. Glenstone, Suite 308, Springfield, MO 65804. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do. ©1999

Women's track team posts best-ever season finish

STORY BY JASON NICOL ■ FILE PHOTO BY KELLY GLASSCOCK

The K-State women's track and field team posted its best finish ever after placing third at the Big 12 Championships at the University of Missouri and taking 11th place at the NCAA Division I Championships, which concluded Sunday at Duke University.

Led by freshman Amy Mortimer and junior Korene Hinds, the Wildcats were runner-up to Texas and Big 12 champions Nebraska at the May 19-21 meet. Louisiana State took the top women's spot at the national meet.

Mortimer set a Big 12 women's record after finishing with a first-place time of 16:26.09 in the 5,000 meters and had a second-place finish in the 1,500 meters.

Mortimer's record time qualified her for the NCAA Championships, where she finished third Friday and earned All-America honors.

"Amy ran really smart," K-State head track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "She was in the middle of the pack for most of the race. It was a very fast pace for as hot and humid as it was. It was really brutal conditions for a race like that, but Amy is Amy, and she always wants to win. She was fantastic."

Hinds also set a Big 12 record at the conference championships when she captured the top spot in the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:17.68. She followed that up with a second-place finish in the 800-meter race.

Hinds also qualified for an appearance at the NCAA Championships where she took second place in the 3,000 meters and earned All-America honors.

Also making her presence felt at the Big 12 and NCAA meets was senior Erin Anderson. She took top honors in the pole vault at Columbia with a jump of 13 feet, 5 1/4 inches and finished second at Duke with a height of 13 feet, 9 1/4 inches. She also earned her third All-America honor.

The men's team did not have the same success at the Big 12 meet as the women. They finished ninth with no one advancing to the national championship meet. However, Rovelto said youth played a big factor in the men's low placing and that the men's future is looking up.

"We will be much improved on the men's side," he said. "We have some quality and a very complete team returning next year."

As for the women's program, Rovelto said he is excited about this year's recruiting class and the promise it holds for the women's team. Last year's recruiting class was ranked fourth in the nation, and Rovelto said he thinks this year's class is even better.

"We have a great number of quality athletes," he said. "The women's team should be even better."

Rovelto, Hinds receive coach, female athlete of year honors

By DAN SMITH

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team traveled to Duke University for the 2000 NCAA Track and Field Championships May 31-June 3 with two new individual awards.

On May 26, the United States Track Coaches Association honored a coach and a men's and a women's athlete from nine regions throughout the country.

Cliff Rovelto, in his eighth year as the Wildcats' coach, and junior standout Korene Hinds were named the Midwest's Outdoor Track and Field Coach and Female Athlete of the year, respectively.

Rovelto has been named the District V

Women's Coach of the Year twice before by the USTCA. He was honored this year by leading the Wildcats to an impressive third-place finish at the Big 12 Championships May 19-21 in Columbia, Mo., where he helped three of his athletes gain Big 12 conference outdoor titles. Rovelto also qualified six women for the NCAA Championships.

Since joining the Wildcats in 1993, Rovelto has helped the track program gain prominence both in the Big 12 and nationally, coaching 50 conference champion athletes and 55 NCAA All-Americans.

Hinds, an NCAA All-American, All-Midwest region, All-Big 12 conference and high point scorer as a sophomore in 1998, is not inexperienced with awards either. She qualified for both the NCAA Championships 800- and 3,000-meter races this year.

By running a conference record breaking time of 9:17.68 earlier this year, Hinds became the Big 12's 3,000-meter outdoor champion, qualifying her to run in the NCAA Championship race where she finished second with a personal best 3000 time of 9:10.10. A native of Spanishtown, Jamaica, Hinds also hopes to make a run at the Jamaican Olympic team this summer.

Neither Hinds nor Rovelto could be reached for comment.

Amy Mortimer, a freshman from Riley, Kan., competes in K-State's annual duel with Missouri-Kansas City at Manhattan's Warner Park on Oct. 8, 1999. Mortimer won the three-mile event with a time of 15:38.

Sophomore Alena Jecminkova returns a shot at the Washburn Tennis Facility during a match earlier this year. Jecminkova is the third player in K-State history to reach the NCAA Singles Championships.

The K-State tennis team finished the spring season ranked No. 4 in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association regional rankings and No. 43 in the nation overall.

Both freshman Petra Sedlmajerova and sophomore Alena Jecminkova finished with individual rankings of fourth and fifth, respectively, by the ITA in the women's singles rankings.

Sedlmajerova, ITA regional Rookie of the Year and No. 11 ITA fall finisher, also helped capture a No. 7 doubles ranking with junior teammate Eva Novotna.

Jecminkova, who was ranked No. 8 after this last fall, advanced to the NCAA Singles Championships this year, becoming just the third player in K-State history to do so.

Overall, the Wildcats posted one of its finest seasons in school history. The team's 14-9 record tied school marks set in 1989 and 1990 for wins in a season.

The Cats' 7-4 Big 12 Conference record also tied previous records for conference victories.

5 bodies found in barrels; S&M enthusiast suspected

By JOHN MILBURN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISONVILLE, Mo. — The bodies of five women have been found in barrels in a storage locker and a field belonging to a man who met women over the Internet for sadomasochistic sex, authorities said Tuesday.

The first two bodies were found Saturday on his property in La Cygne, Kan. Three more bodies in 55-gallon drums were discovered Monday at a storage locker rented by the man about 30 miles away in Raymore, Mo.

John Edward Robinson, 56 — considered a suspect in all five deaths — appeared in Kansas court Monday on charges he sexually assaulted two women at hotels. His $250,000 bail was raised to $5 million.

The two women told authorities they objected to him photographing them and said he brutalized them in a way that went beyond what they intended. One of the women had traveled from Texas to have a sexual encounter with Robinson in April.

The five victims are believed related to Robinson's alleged Internet relationships with women interested in sadomasochism. He was known to use the screen name "slavemaster" in his computer correspondence and sometimes called himself James Turner in person, said Paul Morrison, the district attorney in Johnson County, Kan.

An autopsy on one victim showed blunt trauma to the head, and autopsies on the others are expected to show similar injuries, said Chris Koster, prosecutor for Cass County, Mo.

Saturday's discovery followed a three-month missing persons investigation. Robinson had rented the locker for at least five years, Morrison said.

"I can say one thing: The bodies (in the field) appear to have been in those barrels for some time," Morrison said. "The bodies in Raymore have probably been there longer."

In Kansas, about 20 investigators — including some from the FBI — continued to search Robinson's property. Crews planned to drain a pond on the land.

More aftershocks terrify Sumatra

By IRWAN FIRDAUS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANNA, Indonesia — Shards of glass rattle in a broken window frame and power cables sway above a devastated street. A second later, the earth rolls violently underfoot.

Terrified villagers stop going through the rubble of their demolished homes and run for their lives.

"Allahu akbar! (God is great!) Please stop this catastrophe," cries a young woman clutching her two infants.

The tremor Tuesday was one of more than 450 aftershocks that have rattled southern Sumatra since a 7.9-magnitude earthquake hit Sunday night, killing at least 103 people and injuring about 500.

In Manna, a small town badly hit by the tremors, people were terrified and, like tens of thousands in the quake zone, were spending their third straight night outdoors.

"I don't know when I will go back into my house. When will it be safe?" asked Rahayu, a woman who like many Indonesians uses a single name.

With the government struggling to help wrecked communities on Sumatra, a ship full of aid was also due to head for Enggano, a tiny island 125 miles to the south, where the exact extent of casualties and destruction was still unknown.

Initial reports said as many as 90 percent of the buildings were flattened on Enggano, which lies close to the quake's epicenter in the Indian Ocean. It was not known how many were dead there.

The governor of Bengkulu province, Hasan Zen, said the ship carrying rice, other food and medical supplies would reach Enggano on Wednesday.

In Bengkulu, there was growing resentment against the government, which many accused of moving slowly to tackle the disaster.

"We know the government will do nothing so we help ourselves," said Desmi Yati, a mother of three.

She was squatting on a mattress in front of her destroyed home on the outskirts of Bengkulu town, on Sumatra's southwest coast, where residents were collecting donations for the needy.

Doctors have struggled to cope with the injured at the devastated Yunus General Hospital, performing emergency operations under plastic sheeting. Blood supplies also were running low and medical equipment was lost under the debris.

Some 100 badly injured patients — some two or three to a bed — were being treated in the hospital parking lot. Twelve had died from quake-inflicted injuries.

The quake cut off communications and electricity, and closed the area's main airport. Health officials were worried about the spread of disease because supplies of clean water were scarce.

The Indonesian government, cash-strapped by a lingering economic crisis, has been mustering rescue personnel from different parts of the country. Frustrated local officials said they were doing all they could.

The first foreign relief reached the quake zone Tuesday. An advance party of a Singaporean 20-member medical team arrived in Bengkulu with emergency supplies and tents.

Other countries have pledged assistance and an international Red Cross team was to assess the damage by helicopter today.

Country artist John Berry shakes hands with some of the Country Stampede audience at Tuttle Creek State Park last summer. Berry made his way through the crowd during his opening song.

New lineup for 2000 Stampede

Four days of non-stop music and fun are about to take Manhattan by storm.

The fifth annual Country Stampede will showcase great music performers along with a variety of new entertainment additions. The festival is scheduled for June 22-25 at Tuttle Creek State Park.

"This year, instead of one big anchor every night, there's a strong lineup across the board," Paige Roesler, festival manager, said.

Collin Raye, Yankee Grey and Dustin Evans will perform June 22 at the Cox Communications Kick-Off Party.

Performers booked for June 23 are Shannon Smith, Chely Wright, Oak Ridge Boys, Montgomery Gentry, Sawyer Brown and Styx.

The June 24 lineup includes Dustin Evans, Travis Tritt, Rhett Akins, Lee Ann Womack, Kenny Chesney and Dwight Yoakam.

June 25 performers include Jill Marie, Brad Paisley, Sammy Kershaw, Lonestar and Brooks & Dunn.

Survey results from ticket sales for the Affiliated Foods Midwest Country Stampede show the most popular performers this year are Brooks & Dunn, Dwight Yoakam and Styx.

Roesler said part of the popularity of Brooks & Dunn is due to their show at the 1997 Country Stampede.

"They really put on a good show," Roesler said. "It was a high-energy performance."

Styx brings a different style of music to the festival. Roesler said people are excited about Styx because of their rock action.

The Flying Diablos, a freestyle motocross jumping team, headlines the additions to this year's festival. They will appear June 24 and 25.

Longhorn's will conduct an onsite karaoke contest. The winner of the contest will perform on the main stage June 25 after Dwight Yoakam.

In celebration of the festival's fifth year and the new millennium, there will also be a fireworks show June 25.

WIBM-FM 97.3's tent will feature Internet services that will allow people to send Country Stampede postcards to their friends and check e-mail.

Festival goers who would like an opportunity to cool down in the parking lot will have the option of being sprayed by the Blue Township Fire Department.

"With all the new additions, we're preparing for more people," Roesler said.

The mechanical bull and WIBW-FM's giant video screen will return for this year's Stampede.

A wide variety of food and beverage vendors also will be on the grounds again. Roesler said popular items such as Indian tacos, blooming onions, kettle corn and corn on the cob will be available.

Creation of 3rd Street tax district denied

By WENDY SCHANTZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Commission denied a proposal June 1 for a tax increment financing district on North Third Street. The district would have helped redevelop the area south of Bluemont Street and north of Leavenworth Street into a 425,000-square-foot shopping center.

"That was the last opportunity for this particular proposal," city manager Ron Fehr said. "The proposal is pretty much dead."

By making the area a TIF district, the city would have helped Plaza Manhattan LLC redevelop the area. A TIF district allows developers to use taxes the businesses will bring to pay off some of the costs. Because a new shopping center on North Third Street would have increased city income through property and sales taxes from existing businesses, residences and industry, the developers could have used that increment to finance some of the infrastructure costs, like improvements to streets and sewers. Taxes gained from the area would not have decreased, but they would not have increased either.

"It was an opportunity for the most part to relocate a major industrial business that is kind of really out place in downtown Manhattan," Fehr said. "It would have redeveloped the area in a manner that would have strengthened the downtown."

The county commission and the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board had the power to deny the city's proposal if they decided it would have an adverse affect on them. The school board allowed the proposal to proceed, but commissioners Jim Williams and Russ Frey voted against it, with commissioner Bob Newsome abstaining.

"The county commissioners weren't convinced it was the right thing to do," Fehr said. "It was their one and only legal authority to participate, but I'm a little disappointed we didn't have the opportunity to at least look at what the possibilities for the development would have been."

Frey said county commissioners did not know enough about the plan.

"We decide if it would have an adverse affect on the county, and I don't know how to define that without knowing more about it," Frey said. "I knew I had better exercise my right or from that point on just have an unlimited right of suggestion."

Williams said he voted against the proposal because it would displace businesses and families.

"It's pretty hard for people to relocate and be left in suspense," Williams said. "I don't think anybody likes to have someone tell them, 'Well, you're going to have to move, and you're going to have to take our price.' To me, it's not fair."

He also said he was confident he made the right decision.

"I've had 40-50 phone calls since Thursday to confirm that I did the right thing," Williams said. "I personally contacted about 200 people and only two or three thought it would work. I represent the people and want to know how they feel."

While Fehr said businesses would be discouraged to come to Manhattan without the city's help, Williams said the decision would not affect new businesses.

"It can be done incrementally and independently by free enterprise without giving away tax dollars," he said. "Major companies don't need any tax abatement, and most don't ask for any."

Fehr said a business originally looking into the TIF district still shows an interest in Manhattan. Walgreens is looking at possibly redeveloping property in the northwest portion of the proposed district.

"If Walgreens develops on Fourth Street and Bluemont, it will be done by private enterprise," Frey said. "We won't have to put tax money into that."

Frey said he hopes whatever is done will be worked on by both the city and the county.

"I just hope we can proactively go ahead and collaborately work to do what is best for the tax payers of the city of Manhattan and Riley County," Frey said.

Frey said it might be better to decide issues like this in the future through elections.

"It's a form of tax abatement," Frey said. "People ought to have an opportunity to say something."

City Commission approves ordinance on liquor violations

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The approval that city commissioners gave Ordinance No. 6143 might disappoint some minors.

The ordinance targeted violators who furnished alcoholic liquors to minors and minors in possession of alcohol. The penalty doubled from $100 to $200.

The city is just keeping in line with the laws of the state of Kansas, which were amended, Mayor Karen McCulloh said.

Commissioners also approved a stronger ordinance dealing with battery and domestic battery. Those who have been convicted three times will be considered felons and will no longer be under city jurisdiction.

In other business, commissioners approved the separation of the Manhattan Housing Board from the city. However, this separation will not take place until the beginning of next year because of payroll issues.

In addition, commissioners approved a resolution that will allow National Church Residences to provide senior citizens with 46 additional housing units on 420 Colorado St.

Air Force documents uncovered

BY ROGER BURNS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Military investigators have found a formerly secret Air Force document stating that U.S. planes, responding to a request by the Army, strafed columns of civilian refugees approaching American lines during the chaotic early days of the Korean War.

The document was dated July 25, 1950 — one month after the war began with a communist North Korean army invasion of South Korea. It adds to statements from U.S. veterans and documents uncovered by The Associated Press last year indicating that as American troops retreated toward the southern tip of the Korean peninsula, the U.S. military deliberately fired on civilians.

The memo also emphasizes that U.S. ground commanders were fearful their lines were being infiltrated by civilian refugees that might include or be controlled by North Korean soldiers.

The document was first reported by CBS News on Monday. A copy on file at the National Archives was provided to the AP today.

The Army opened an investigation into reported U.S. killings of civilians in South Korea after the AP quoted U.S. veterans and South Korean survivors saying American GIs carried out a mass killing of civilians July 26-28, 1950, at the hamlet of No Gun Ri. Ex-GIs spoke of hundreds dead. The South Koreans say 300 were shot to death.

In its report last fall, AP reported that declassified military documents showed general orders had been issued to shoot at civilians who crossed front lines.

"Fire everyone trying to cross lines. Use discretion in case of women and children," said an order issued by the Army's 1st Cavalry Division.

The Air Force memo is titled, "Policy on Strafing Civilian Refugees."

"It is reported that large groups of civilians, either composed of or controlled by North Korean soldiers, are infiltrating U.S. positions," the memo says.

The memo was signed by Air Force Col. Turner C. Rogers, the deputy chief of staff for operations for the 5th Air Force.

Rogers noted the sensitivity of the problem of stopping civilian refugees from passing through U.S. lines.

"Our operations involving the strafing of civilians is sure to receive wide publicity and may cause embarrassment to the U.S. Air Force and to the U.S. government in its relations with the United Nations," Rogers wrote.

"It is not understood why the army is not screening such personnel or shooting them as they come through, if they desire such action," he said.

Rogers recommended that a policy be adopted whereby Air Force planes would not attack civilian refugee groups "unless they are definitely known to contain North Korean soldiers or commit hostile acts."

Inmate captured after helicopter escape

BY KARIN MEADOWS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANTOWN, Fla. — A child molester who broke out of a treatment center by helicopter was captured along with the pilot Tuesday.

The capture came a day after the daylight escape, in which a chopper with a student pilot at the controls landed on the grounds of the treatment center and picked up Steven Whitsett, 28.

The helicopter cleared a 15-foot fence but crashed near a grove 100 yards away. Whitsett and his pilot, Clifford Burkhart, 23, ran off into the surrounding swamp armed.

Sheriff's spokesperson Jenelle Atlas said sheriff's deputies captured the two men Tuesday in a ditch four miles from the center.

She said she did not know what condition they were in.

Authorities looking for the men had combed a 5-by-9-mile area of orange groves, forests and mosquito-ridden swamp in hot and muggy weather.

The escape occurred at 1 p.m. Monday.

Lajuana Richardson, Junction City resident, points out a fossil on a rock formation chart Wednesday near Tuttle Creek Reservoir. Richardson is involved with the Girls Researching Our World program, which encourages middle school-aged girls involvement in science. The two-day program ends today.

Guiding girls toward SCIENCE

STORY BY DANICA COTO

Environmental science serves as focus of 2-day workshop for middle school girls Hers is a family of 36, but Spud is her favorite.

He is a black, white and brown guinea pig and is the reason Lindsay Stewart came to K-State.

Stewart, a student at Woodrow Wilson School in Manhattan, is participating in a two-day environmental science-enhancement workshop at K-State on Wednesday and today.

She said she chose to be in the living things unit because, after all, she loves animals — all 36 of hers.

The workshop is part of the Girls Researching Our World program, made possible by a $30,000 grant from the National Science Foundation's Gender Equity program. More than 100 middle school-aged girls came from different schools across Kansas.

"It's not a gee-whiz type of activity," said Ruth Dyer, assistant to the provost. "It's really designed to allow them to have a hands-on experience."

There are two other units the girls could have chosen: the water unit and the land unit.

Jenny Heppert, a student at Lawrence West Junior High School, said she chose the living things unit for the same reasons Stewart did.

"I decided it would be a fun activity to do," she said. "I really don't know that much about living things."

Heppert found out about the program through the Kaw Valley Girl Scout Council, one of the program's partners.

Those who signed up for the land unit visit Tuttle Creek Spillway to study rock formations and collect fossils. They also will analyze sediment from the Blue River and visit the Konza Prairie Biological Station to study soils and stream deposits.

The water-unit participants visit the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area to gather data from the weather station, calculate stream velocities at King's Creek and tour Manhattan's water treatment plant.

Those in the living things unit observe plant diversity and animal behavior on Konza Prairie and watch a video, provided by Haskell Indians Nations University, another program partner, about how Indians use plants for cures.

There are more reasons why the girls chose to attend GROW.

"I decided to come because it's interesting to learn things like living the life of a college student," said Felicia Polle, a student at Junction City Junior High School. "They're helping us and training us to basically see what we learn."

The event's organizers are also rewarded with new experiences, said Jacqueline Spears, director of Women's Studies.

"To me, it's just incredibly exciting to see what the last 30 years have brought in terms of changes," she said.

Dyer said she agreed.

As she handed out information to faculty and volunteers, Dyer said the most recurrent comment was that faculty and volunteers wished they had GROW years ago.

"This is to have an increased awareness of what scientists and engineers do," Dyer said. "Sometimes science and engineering is kind of a nerdy image, and girls this age, their interest may decline in this image."

The girls meet mostly with women faculty and students who she said she hopes become mentors and role models.

Beth Montelone, assistant professor of biology, said it is a great opportunity to get a hands-on science experiment.

"It's kind of hard to know if you want to be a scientist if you don't know what they do," she said.

Spears said she enjoyed seeing the enthusiasm the girls had, something that was a bit surprising.

"It has tremendous impact on me," she said.

"Historically, middle school is the age when girls lose interest in science and math. We'd like to introduce them to some of the environmental issues they're going to deal with as adults ... but we're also going to give them the opportunity to explore science and technology as a future career."

Program partners are looking into receiving a three-year grant from the Gender Equity in Science program so that they can invite girls on an on-going basis. K-State is also issuing a pre- and post-survey to see what the girls' responses were to the activities.

Not only are they getting exposure to what careers are available in these fields, but they also have a chance to interact and share their interests, Dyer said.

"When you have another hundred kids 'just like me,' I think it can be exciting and reaffirming of your own interests," she said.

"Middle school is the age when girls lose interest in science and math. We'd like to introduce them to some of the environmental issues they're going to deal with as adults ... but we're also going to give them the opportunity to explore science and technology as a future career."

Peace discussions between Syria, Israel might resume

CAIRO, Egypt — Syria showed interest Wednesday in reopening peace talks with Israel, but Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa did not signal any shift in his country's territorial demands.

"I did not get any indication of a change," Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said of her meeting with the Syrian official.

In a chat with reporters aboard her homeward-bound U.S. Air Force jet, Albright said she expected to see al-Sharaa again, but she did not say when.

India's population to double in 100 years, forecast says

WASHINGTON D.C. — It has taken thousands of years for the population of India to swell to 1 billion. It may take just 100 years for India to add another billion.

The U.S. population is expected to rise from its current 275 million to 403 million by mid-century, moderate growth due to an overall positive economic forecast and continued immigration, Carl Haub, one of the authors on the new report on world population, said.

Population growth in Africa is predicted in spite of the AIDS epidemic, because the fertility rate of 38 births per 1,000 people is still much higher than the mortality rate of 14 deaths per 1,000. Also, 43 percent of the continent's population is under age 15. By comparison, only 14 percent of Europe's population is under age 15.

Government could restrict access to early-abortion pill

WASHINGTON D.C. — Proposed rules being considered by the government could restrict access of the early-abortion pill, RU-486, said the director of Planned Parenthood.

The Food and Drug Administration had said in February it would approve sale of RU-486, also known as mifepristone, once some final, but undisclosed, requirements were met.

Census taker: wealthy behind in mailing their census forms

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. — Laura Rostvold won't name the famous people who didn't mail in their census forms. As a census-taker, she is sworn to secrecy.

But, "I recognized the name of a former professional baseball player, and there are some celebrities," said Rostvold, who goes door-to-door in wealthy neighborhoods.

The Census Bureau is making its biggest effort yet to encourage homeless people, minorities and the poor to mail back the form for the nation's once-a-decade count. But in other neighborhoods — namely rich ones — the bureau might have mistakenly relied too heavily on people's sense of civic duty.

Study says surgery can relieve Parkinson's disease symptoms

Burning a tiny hole deep in the brain can relieve some symptoms of Parkinson's disease for more than five years, a study found. But some significant improvements, including the ability to live unassisted, wear off.

Still, the surgery can be useful when medicine alone cannot control the progressive neurological disorder, doctors in Toronto concluded.

The surgery is called pallidotomy and involves the removal of a part of the brain that controls movement.

House GOP would earmark surplus to cut national debt

WASHINGTON D.C. — House Republicans proposed Wednesday that any additional budget surplus be earmarked this year exclusively to pay down the public debt, mainly to prevent the money from being used for an election-year spending spree.

"Debt relief should be a top priority, not an afterthought," said Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "This plan says it's time for Washington to pay its bills."

AT&T says it will defer plans to raise its per-minute rates

WASHINGTON D.C. — After being sharply rebuked by federal regulators, AT&T said Wednesday it will defer its plan to raise many per-minute rates for tens of millions of customers.

The nation's largest long-distance carrier said it will study ways to restructure its rates, focusing on basic rate consumers who make few calls.

Graves planning to activate state drought response team

BURLINGTON, Kan. — Gov. Bill Graves said Wednesday that he plans to activate a statewide drought response team.

Al LeDoux, director of the Kansas Water Office, sent a letter to Graves on Tuesday requesting the action. The team consists of representatives from various state agencies, including LeDoux's office.

Tuttle Creek Lake Festival to offer triathalon, local music, disc golf

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's kind of like golf.

It's addictive, there's camaraderie, and it's fun.

At least that's what Mike Hamler, a triathlete and Manhattan chiropractor, said.

Unlike golf, however, triathlons require more endurance.

Hamler's biggest challenge Sunday will be swimming 500 yards, biking 10 miles and running 3 miles.

He will be one of many participating in the Little Apple Triathlon, one of the events at the first Tuttle Creek Lake Festival, which will begin at the River Pond Area below the dam.

The triathlon will start the festival at 8:30 a.m., and more events will follow.

"It's the very first time that anything like this is being coordinated," said Keith Eyestone, owner of Big Dawg Marina, who will be providing the beer tent at the festival.

"It's a way to come out to the lake and experience those things for the first time and get back into the routine of using our lake."

Events include disc-golf and jet-ski competitions, music from two local bands, and fireworks.

Eyestone said he expects between 2,000 and 3,000 people that day something natural resources specialist George Wurst said is good.

"There's something for everybody," Wurst said.

Catering to different interests, the festival will offer a craft fair, a farmer's market, food vendors, a petting zoo and a business and antique cars exposition.

Wurst said he hopes people become aware of all the recreational opportunities, such as hiking, horse trails, camping, swimming and fishing Tuttle Creek State Park has to offer.

In addition, the Kansas River Outfitters will offer canoes and other equipment, he said.

Volunteers are still needed for the festival. For more information, call 539-7941.

Festival events

The festival is Sunday at Tuttle Creek State Park and is sponsored by the Kansas Wildlife and Park Department and the Corps of Engineers Department.

■ 8:30 a.m. — Little Apple Triathlon

■ 10 a.m. — Disc-golf tournament

■ 1:30 p.m. — "Fishing on Tuttle Creek" clinic by Paul Miller

■ 2 p.m. — Jet-ski competition

■ 6 p.m. — Two local bands will perform

■ 9:30 p.m. — Fireworks display

Sri Lanka cabinet minister among 21 killed by suicide bomber

■ Tamil rebels, seeking independent homeland, believed responsible.

BY LAURINDA KEYS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — A suicide bomber shattered Sri Lanka's first-ever War Heroes Day, killing a Cabinet minister and 20 other people Wednesday during a fund-raiser for the families of slain soldiers.

Minister for Industrial Development C.V. Gooneratne was assassinated as he walked among supporters in his parliamentary district in Ratmalana.

Gooneratne, the bomber, and 20 others were killed, said the director of Kalubowila Hospital, Dr. W.G. Gunawardena. The doctor said the minister's wife was among 60 others who were injured.

There was no claim of responsibility for the bombing. But it was similar to past attacks by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, which has been fighting for 17 years to create a separate homeland for minority Tamils.

The rebels have a suicide unit, the Black Tigers, known for targeting government officials and politicians.

A government statement said the motive was to mark "a day that was specially meant to pay tribute to the war heroes battling to maintain the...territorial integrity of the nation." The day was declared to boost the morale of the 40,000 troops fighting the rebels in the Jaffna peninsula.

Before the bombing, all traffic in the capital stopped and people were told to observe two minutes of silence as President Chandrika Kumaratunga said in a televised speech, "This is the most sacred moment for the nation."

After the bombing, mobs began attacking homes in Ratmalana belonging to minority Tamils, a government official said on condition he not be named.

Jehan Perera of the Peace Council said Gooneratne was very close to his constituents.

"They would be so angry and upset they would want to retaliate at anyone," Perera said.

The government imposed a curfew on the bombed neighborhood and two adjacent suburbs and barred journalists from the area. The army's rapid deployment force surrounded a low-cost housing area in the neighborhood and searched for suspects, a member of the force told The AP.

The Information Department issued a statement appealing to the public "to stay calm at a sensitive time such as this when emotions are running high." It added that steps had been taken "to protect all communities from any backlash."

A survivor said the bomber had hopped out of a taxi and greeted the minister before detonating the bomb in an intersection.

Afterward, the bomber's severed head and limbs were scattered around a traffic island.

Police dragged one man from the scene. Later, officers said he was being investigated.

About half of the Tamil rebels are believed to be women, many recruited as children, and women are often suicide bombers. They are known to wear their hair short and sometimes dress like men.

The gender of the bomber could not immediately be determined. The disfigured head had close-cropped hair like a man, and there were trousers on the body.

Melissa Rausch, junior in management information systems, hangs merchandise Wednesday afternoon on the wall of the computer store. The store has been relocated from the bookstore to the east side of the Union Courtyard on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.

IVAN KOZAR/COLLEGIAN

Amid renovations, Union computer store opensBy NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As a part of the $11.5 million Union enhancement project, the doors to the new K-State Student Union Computer Store have now opened.

The store is an enhancement of the computer department formerly located in the K-State Union Bookstore and contains a wide variety of computer and technological products.

It is located on the east side of the Union's first floor, which allows consumers easy access, said Chris Loehr, store manager.

"It's more accessible than it was in the bookstore," he said. "Now students don't have to come all the way into the store for the computer products."

Cindie Snyder, marketing and promotions manager, said the store carries a wide variety of manufacturers' computers, including Apple, Hewlett-Packard, Texas Instruments, Adobe and Corel, and that it will continue to be K-State's largest source for Macintosh products.

Loehr said the Union is working with Gateway computers on signing a contract and hopes to carry its products in the near future.

"Any time that we can open up something like this in the Union, we are excited," Snyder said. "One of our goals is to keep up with the times, and that's what this is."

Because it is a computer and technology store, it carries not only computers, software, scanners and Zip drives, but calculators, batteries and compact discs as well.

Loehr said the store carries technological products because so often they go hand-in-hand with computer products.

"Technology in society is moving so rapidly it's becoming an important part of our lifestyle, so we're offering a store where people can get that technology," Loehr said.

One advantage the store offers is academic pricing. The store has signed contracts with companies that allow products to be sold to K-State students, faculty and staff at a lower rate. Apple computers and Twinhead Laptop computers are just two products available at academic pricing for those who are eligible.

Loehr said Microsoft products are now available for about half the retail price.

Those who desire the academic price must present their Wildcat Cards when making a purchase. Loehr said this was to ensure those getting the academic rate were eligible.

He said they are excited for the store's opening and encourage everyone to stop by.

"We're excited about our location, and we hope the students, faculty and staff are as excited as we are," he said.

Snyder said giving the once-small computer department in the bookstore its own space is a part of keeping up with campus needs.

"By giving the little computer store that was once in the back of the bookstore a bigger space, it will only enhance students' ability to get information on campus,"

Snyder said. "And now people can see the products and services it's always had."

She said the opening also brings them great excitement because it signifies Union renovations are coming closer to an end.

"We're very excited to see the Union renovation winding down. It was a 757-day project, and the computer store opening was one of the things lower on the list," she said. "We're starting to see the light at the end of the tunnel."

During the summer, the store will be open 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday. During New Student Orientation, the store will be open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays.

Aside from computers, the computer store sells computer accessories, supplies and other electronics. The store's hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

3-hour self-defense workshop helps area girls learn to

G.R.O.W.

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They all laughed while they punched his stomach and kicked his shin.

They laughed even harder when they gouged his eyes.

But Manhattan resident Bart Smith didn't wince: a four-foot barrier of empty space between him and his assailants kept him from flinching.

The girls kept punching at him anyhow, all while yelling, "No! Get back! Leave me alone!"

They were all practicing self-defense moves for three hours as part of the Girls Researching Our World program, an environmental-science enhancement workshop.

"It's kind of different," Amy Hodges, from Marshall Middle School, said. "I really didn't know what to expect."

The girls were led by Diana Tarver, a tae kwon do instructor and Salina resident.

She started the session by asking people to imagine situations and their responses to them. Then she made the girls line up and walk from one end of the room to the other.

Five girls were picked, and the other hundred or so sat down.

Among the girls left standing were the girl with the two pigtails, the one in the overalls and the one with the shy eyes. The tae kwon do students chose them because they were least likely to fight back.

As the night progressed, they Junction City residents Angela Hughley (right) and Amanda Dozier, both 13, punch the air and scream, "No!" during a Wednesday night self-defense class for Girls Researching Our World.

learned how to fight back. After all, every girl had raised her hand when Tarver asked who had attitude in the room.

"Nobody has the right to touch me! Nobody has the right to hurt me!" they shouted back at her.

The session gave the girls ideas on how to stay safe and how to protect themselves in and out of school, said Smith, one of the tae kwon do instructors.

"We're hoping to teach them general knowledge about self defense and build their confidence," he said.

Brittany DeLaney, the Junction City Middle School student who was one of the five left standing, said she liked the session.

"I didn't expect this," she said. "I thought it would be more like karate moves."

Denise Quigley, also from her school, said she was excited they taught her how not to get hurt by people.

"It's cool," she said. "It teaches me not to mess around so you can be safer."

This session was only the beginning, however. Tarver said she hoped the girls would have enough fun to maintain their interest and enroll in a self-defense or martial arts class.

"The clinic was designed to empower children and young women and help give them permission to be assertive," Tarver said. "It's a fun way to introduce a scary idea."

Autopsies reveal 5 female murder victims died of head trauma

By JOHN MILBURN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISONVILLE, Mo. —

Five women are dead, their bodies found in barrels on both sides of the Missouri-Kansas state line.

A man who allegedly solicited sadomasochistic sex over the Internet using the name "slavemaster" is considered the prime suspect in the deaths of the women whose bodies were found stuffed in 55-gallon drums, authorities said.

A Kansas prosecutor also said that John Edward Robinson Sr. was the last person seen with a 19-year-old woman and her infant daughter before they disappeared in 1985.

Last week's arrest of Robinson, 56, led police to two bodies found Saturday on his property in La Cygne, Kan. Three more bodies were discovered Monday at a storage locker rented by Robinson about 30 miles away, in Raymore, Mo.

Autopsies showed the victims died of blunt trauma to the head, authorities said.

Investigators resumed draining a pond on Robinson's property Wednesday morning. A pickup was found in the pond early in the investigation, Linn County Sheriff Marvin Stites said, but investigators do not believe it was connected to a victim.

The sheriff also said investigators plan "literally an inch-by-inch search" of the site.

"We don't know that there are more victims on the property, but we are going to check to make certain," he said.

Johnson County, Kan., District Attorney Paul Morrison said he did not think any more bodies would be found.

He did confirm Tuesday, however, that investigators have also focused on Robinson's possible involvement in the 1985 disappearance of Lisa Stasi and her 5-month-old daughter, Tiffany.

Stasi was last seen at a motel in Olathe, Kan., where Robinson had arranged for them to stay.

Microsoft to appeal breakup by government

By MICHAEL J. MARTINEZ
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

REDMOND, Wash. — Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates vowed to appeal a federal judge's ruling Wednesday to split his company in two, saying the decision would harm computer users and the high-tech industry.

"I'm reminded of the saying, 'Today is the first day of the rest of your life.' Well, today is the first day of the rest of this case," Gates told a news conference near his company's suburban Seattle headquarters.

Hours earlier, U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson gave Microsoft four months to devise a plan for breaking the company into two separate parts — one that would own and market the Windows operating system and another that would handle all other Microsoft software.

The company said it would file for a stay of the ruling and a notice of appeal within the next few days.

"This is clearly the most massive attempt at government regulation of the technology industry ever, and it was conceived by the government and imposed by this ruling without a single day of testimony or scrutiny," Gates said.

Company officials have long said they would appeal any ruling to break up Microsoft, maintaining that splitting the company would inhibit innovation and harm consumers.

Gates reiterated that in his remarks Wednesday, although he added that ultimately Microsoft "will, of course, abide by any final judgment reached in this case."

"There are many elements of the government's proposal that we think go beyond what's reasonable," Gates said.

"It's not just the breakup, but also the fact that when we do innovative work we have to give it to our competitors rather than get the benefits of our innovation."

"I think this ruling flies in the face of what consumers experience every day — a high-tech economy that's lowering prices and bringing out lots of great new products," he said.

As the company enters the appeals process, Gates said Microsoft will continue developing its Next Generation Windows services as planned. He added that partners and customers have been very understanding and have fully supported Microsoft.

Asked if he had any regrets, Gates said, "Perhaps I should have taken the opportunity to go (to court) and talk about this in person."

Gates said Microsoft is confident the appeals court will overturn Jackson's ruling.

prosecutors said in a 1986 court motion.

The missing persons report in the case was ordered sealed on Tuesday, police said.

According to a sentencing memorandum filed seeking to have Robinson sentenced as a habitual criminal in a 1986 felony theft case, he was reported to have approached workers at a Kansas City area hospital, saying he and 15 other businessmen were setting up a charitable organization to assist unwed mothers.

According to those documents, workers at the hospital, which were not identified, introduced Robinson to Stasi.

After Stasi and the child were reported missing, Robinson told authorities he found a letter in which Stasi said she and the baby were moving to Denver, but authorities found no trace of them there.

QUICK NOTES

Compiled from staff and wire reports.

> INTERNATIONAL Israeli, Palestinians reopen talks on overall settlement

WASHINGTON D.C. — With a White House admonition that time is short, Israeli and Palestinian negotiators are resuming their sputtering talks on an overall settlement that their governments pledged to conclude by mid-September.

It is supposed to determine the future of Jerusalem and how much land Israel will cede to the Palestinians for a state. Refugee and water problems also were on the agenda for the talks at Andrews Air Force Base in suburban Maryland and at Bolling Air Force Base in Washington.

> NATIONAL School bomb threats take off in months after Columbine

THROOP, Pa. — At least 5,000 bomb threats jolted schools across the country in the six months after the Columbine High shootings, costing thousands of lost classroom hours, an education safety group says.

The National School Safety Center did not track the number of threats before the killings, but many schools reported fivefold increases afterward, said Ronald Stephens, the group's executive director.

Police say 3 shots came from outside Kauffman Stadium

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police now say three shots, not two, zipped through Kauffman Stadium during a Kansas City Royals game Friday night.

Kansas City Police Sgt. Richard Smith on Monday also said that based on the trajectory of the shots, they were likely fired from outside the stadium.

Virginia Olsthoorn, 64, of Haysville, Kan., was sitting in the lower level along the right-field line about 10 p.m. Friday when she was hit by a bullet that passed through part of her abdomen and hit her left elbow. She was released from the hospital Saturday morning.

Moments later, a second shot struck another fan's chair in the upper deck. No one was injured.

The third shot hit the back of the stadium scoreboard, Smith said.

> STATE Man charged in barrel deaths; death penalty sought in case

LENEXA, Kan. — A man suspected in the deaths of five women found in barrels in Kansas and Missouri was charged Tuesday with three counts of first-degree murder, and prosecutors plan to seek the death penalty.

John Edward Robinson, 56, already was in jail on $5-million bail on charges of aggravated sexual battery and theft involving two women he allegedly met for sadomasochistic sex after making contact online.

Prosecutors plan to seek the death penalty in the deaths of three women whose bodies were found in a storage locker in Raymore, Mo.

Robinson's lawyer has said his client is not guilty. Robinson's family issued a statement defending him.

Asbury, K-State reach settlement over resignation

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and former men's head basketball coach Tom Asbury have moved on.

Asbury, who was forced to resign at the end of this season, and K-State reached a financial settlement last week concerning Asbury's contract that was broken two years prematurely by K-State.

According to a statement issued by K-State Sports Information, the settlement between K-State and Asbury was "accomplished in an amicable way, and both parties involved are pleased to have the matter resolved."

The statement went on to say that the details of the agreement are confidential and that neither parties would comment on the matter any further.

Asbury, who guided the Wildcats to one of the worst seasons in school history with a 9-19 overall record and a 2-14 mark in Big 12

Conference play, resigned March 10 following the Cats' 84-60 conference tournament loss to the Kansas Jayhawks, a team Asbury never defeated in 17 games while at K-State.

"Tom Asbury and his coaching staff did not come to Kansas State to fail," said K-State Athletic Director Max Urlick following the tournament loss. "No one worked harder over the past six seasons to make K-State a successful basketball program. Tom and his staff have represented Kansas State in a very positive manner, which is greatly appreciated. "We thank Tom, the assistant coaches under him and his players for their combined efforts over the past six seasons."

"Unfortunately, things don't always work out as we would like them to in every situation," Urlick said. "We certainly wish Coach Asbury and his staff the best of luck in the future."

Asbury was 85-88 in six seasons at K-State.

Despite Asbury's statement prior to the conference tournament that he would not resign and that he hadn't been talked to by Urlick concerning his termination as head coach, Urlick said on the day Wooldridge was hired that Asbury was notified as early as Feb. 23 that he would be fired if he did not resign at the season's end.

It was less than four days after Asbury's resignation that former Chicago Bulls assistant coach Jim Wooldridge was introduced as the school's 20th men's head basketball coach. Wooldridge, whose Bulls were the worst team in the NBA at 17-65, was the first and last candidate to interview for the position.

Wooldridge signed a five-year contract worth a reported $2 million, compared to Asbury's $165,000 a year.

"Tom Asbury and his coaching staff did not come here to fail."

— Max Urlick,
K-State athletic director

Tom Asbury hangs his head at the post-game press conference after the Wildcats broke their 11-game losing streak against Texas A&M. Asbury stepped down as head men's basketball coach after the Wildcats lost in the opening round of the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo.

Men's, women's track teams sign 8 recruits to letters of intent for 2000-2001 sports season

By JASON NICOL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's and women's track and field teams completed the first steps in an effort to bolster their position in the Big 12 Conference and nationally, by signing eight more recruits to national letters of intent, head coach Cliff Rovelto announced Monday.

The eight new recruits increases the total number of athletes to 16 for the 2000-2001 season. Rovelto said these athletes will have an immediate effect for K-State.

"Collectively, this group is very good," Rovelto said. "There are a lot of folks who can come right in and score points right away at the Big 12 Championships, maybe even at the NCAA Championships. In this day and age, that's pretty significant for our program."

Among the men's recruits is John Sumner of Shawnee, Kan. A four-year letter winner at Shawnee Mission Northwest High School, he also was named Johnson County runner of the year in 1999 and is the reigning All-Sun Country male athlete of the year.

Sumner is joined by Vonchess Griggs of Cedar Lane, Texas, who will compete in the high jump and long jump. An all-state performer at Van Vleck High School in Texas, Griggs was an all-district selection in the high jump and long jump in 1997, 1998 and 1999. He was an All-State selection in the high jump as a junior in 1999.

Griggs was also a second-team All-State selection running back and a first-team selection in basketball, though his plans for competing in these sports at K-State are unknown.

This year's most talented recruit on the men's side is spring recruit Adi Mordel, said track and field assistant coach Mike Smith.

Mordel, a native of Yavne, Israel, is the current Israeli junior national record holder in the high jump. Smith said Mordel will have an immediate effect in the conference.

"He's the kind of guy who could score well at the Big 12 meets, and he should qualify for the NCAAAs," Smith said.

Rovelto said Mordel also will bring some experience to the team.

"Adi is a very good athlete and will help us in the high jump and triple jump," Rovelto said. "He's coming out of the military, so he is a bit older and more experienced than an average freshman."

On the women's side, the Wildcats inked four more recruits for the upcoming season. That brings the total number of recruits to seven for the women's team.

Among the women's recruits is Washburn Rural High School graduate Cate Holston. A four-time All-

City cross country selection, she holds five Washburn Rural records and holds the Centennial League records in the 1,600 and 3,200 meters.

The Wildcats also signed pole vaulter Sarah James of Dade City, Fla., who will enter K-State as a freshman. She possibly could fill the void left by departing senior and All-American Erin Anderson.

All things considered, Rovelto said this might be the track and field team's best recruiting class ever.

"Combined with our previous signings, this could very well be a class that could contribute more to our team than any other we've ever had," he said.

Fuel prices rise in Manhattan, surrounding area

By APRIL BLACKMON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As gas prices rose to $1.77 a gallon in Manhattan on Monday, many consumers are wondering whether prices will continue to increase.

Dan Bird, clerk at the Kwik Shop at the intersection of 14th Street and Anderson Avenue, said he is unsure of future prices.

Bird said while the store determines the gas prices, they are told to only match the competition's prices and increase prices when they see other gas stations do so.

Travis Conaway, clerk at the Mini Mart on Kansas Highway 24, said he also never knows if gas prices will fluctuate.

"They usually don't say anything in advance," he said. "Our owner calls and says, 'So and so's going up, so let's match them.'"

Bird said gas stations usually increase the prices around student breaks and special events such as Country Stampede. However, another gas clerk disagreed.

"I used to believe when students left, prices went up, but that's not true," said K-State alumnus Tony Muirana, a manager at Dara's Fast Lane on Fort

See the Collegian on Thursday for additional coverage.

Riley Boulevard.

He said K-State students generally leave around prime travel times when gas prices around the United States are increasing.

With gas prices continually increasing, consumers are searching for ways to save money on gas.

Buying gas in Manhattan is at least 3 cents higher than in Wamego, Junction City and Wamego, according to most gas station signs.

Gas stations on Monday charged $1.73 per gallon of unleaded fuel in Ogden, while in Wamego, gas was $1.64. Junction City's gas prices increased to $1.74 per gallon.

George Leiszler, owner of Leiszler Oil, the company supplying gas to area Phillips 66 gas stations, said he hopes gas prices will level off soon.

"I hope it's topped out, but I've been saying that for over a month now," he said.

Fuel savings

- Gentle acceleration, gradual braking and avoiding hard stops can save gas.
- Don't idle for more than a few minutes — idling consumes up to one gallon of gas per hour and wastes more gas than restarting the engine.
- Driving at 55 mph rather than 65 mph can improve your fuel economy by two miles a gallon.
- Don't rest your foot on the brake even slightly to avoid drag.
- Check the oil level when buying gas to be sure the engine is lubricated properly.

- Keep tires properly inflated.
- Don't top off the gas tank, which can cause the gas to evaporate or slosh out.
- Closed windows decrease air resistance, so run the air conditioner while on the highway.
- In stop-and-go traffic, shutting off the air conditioning and opening the windows can save gas.

Consolidating student loans could save graduates money

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Consolidating student loans before July 1 could save K-State graduates money in the long run if interest rates rise as expected, K-State officials said.

Robert Gamez, associate director of Student Financial Assistance, said consolidating loans is when students lump all of their loans together into one monthly payment instead of several.

The interest rates of consolidated loans are calculated differently than regular loans, so if students consolidate by July 1 when the rates are adjusted, they will be required to pay the current rates.

Gamez said he can not be sure at this time how much money this could save.

K-State counsels students who would like to consolidate loans, but Gamez said consolidating is not recommended for current students who plan to take out more loans.

"Generally speaking, we don't advise our students to consolidate," he said.

"Then you have to reconsolidate consolidated loans, and it continues like that."

But for some, this will save them money and time, Gamez said.

"If a student is going to be graduating or graduated in May, they should consolidate by July 1," he said.

There are other benefits to consolidating student loans.

It eliminates the inconvenience of having several loans with multiple lenders and having loan payments based on income, Gamez said.

"Consolidating helps people manage money a little better and makes their loans more manageable," Gamez said.

Topeka police helicopter crash kills pilot, observing passenger

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Topeka police officer who had started helicopter pilot training in March was flying one during a crash that killed him and another officer early Tuesday.

During a news conference Tuesday, police identified Jeff William Howey, 37, as the pilot and Charles Joseph Bohlender Jr., 33, as an observer on board.

Lt. John Sidwell, a spokesman for the department, said the helicopter crashed shortly after midnight as the officers helped investigate a security alarm call from Lowe's Home Improvement Warehouse that turned out to be a false one.

The helicopter was circling around the warehouse as other officers were inside investigating the alarm, Sidwell said.

Sidwell said the helicopter then crashed into a field atop a hill behind the warehouse in west Topeka.

The helicopter burst into flames. "This is a very sad day for the city of Topeka," Sidwell said.

Sidwell said Howey had 151 hours of flight time in the helicopter before he was certified, while the Federal Aviation Administration requires only 40 hours of training.

Police said they did not want to speculate on the cause of the crash, although Police Chief Dean Forster said he would be surprised if it turned out to be pilot error.

Police said the department's remaining three helicopters would be grounded until an investigation is completed by the Kansas Highway Patrol, the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Teenie Beanie Babies return

■ Both Manhattan McDonald's started selling popular stuffed collectors items early Tuesday.

By APRIL BLACKMON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

McDonald's Teenie Beanie Babies are back. Debuting with the first bear — Millennium — on McHappy Day, Tuesday, McDonald's began its month-long Teenie Beanie Baby "beananza."

A total of 29 Teenie Beanie Babies in two series will be sold.

The first series, McDonald's Happy Meal Teenie Beanie Babies, are free with the purchase of a Happy Meal, or sold separately with the purchase of a regular menu item.

The second series, Superstar Teenie Beanie Babies, are specially packaged and cost $2.49 with the purchase of a regularly priced menu item.

"I got one of the bears for my mom today because she loves them, and I love her," Jason Kipp, junior in biology, said.

McDonald's has offered the Teenie Beanie Baby promotion since 1997, making them McDonald's most popular Happy Meal promotion.

Kimberly Kalina, seventh grader at Eisenhower Elementary, has been a Teenie Beanie Baby collector since McDonald's first promotion.

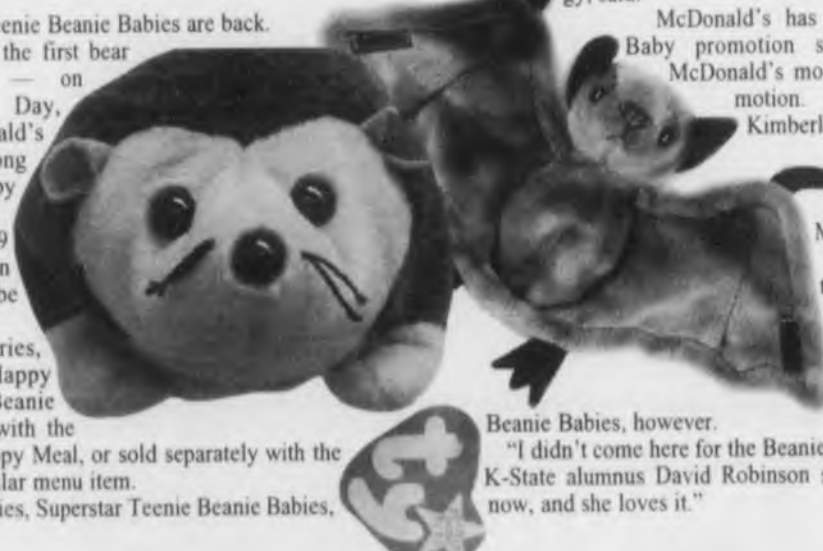

"I just like them because they're cute," she said.

Kalina said she plans on collecting all 29 of them.

Not every McDonald's customer was there for the Beanie Babies, however.

"I didn't come here for the Beanie Babies. I came for the fries," K-State alumnus David Robinson said. "But my sister has one now, and she loves it."

Arts, sciences assistant dean leaves for Michigan

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dennis Wilson, assistant dean of arts and sciences, has accepted a position at the University of Michigan, leaving K-State for two reasons, he said.

Wilson had two different contracts with K-State. He had a five-year contract with the jazz department, which ended one year ago, and a contract as a temporary assistant dean of arts and sciences, which ended this month.

The second reason, he said, is because he sees many opportunities with the University of Michigan. The university was looking to create a position for someone who had the desire to take its jazz program and make it one of the best in the nation, which strongly appealed to Wilson.

"The opportunity at the University of Michigan is very, very good for me," he said. "They're big supporters of jazz and the program, so if I had to choose a school to leave K-State for, it would be this one."

As an assistant professor of music, he will teach classes in jazz arranging, composition and trombone. He also will teach private lessons and lead Michigan's annual jazz festival.

Wilson said although he is leaving

K-State, he will miss it.

"The thing I will miss most is the students," Wilson said. "They have been extremely supportive and eager to learn jazz. I will miss their enthusiasm and drive. The other thing I will miss is all this purple."

He said the response he has gotten from people since his decision to leave has been overwhelming.

"It makes me feel really good to have touched those people," he said.

Wilson said he could have achieved more than he did but was proud of what he had accomplished.

"When I think about my time here at K-State, I didn't do here what I could do, and that is disappointing," Wilson said. "I think I did do a lot, though. I've set a really high standard for jazz. One student once said about me that I'm trying to turn K-State into the Berkley College for music, which is the top school for music, and what's wrong with that? We can have that same thing here at K-State."

He said some of his other accomplishments included the K-State Jazz Festival, changing both its name and mind set; working with the graduation and retention committee; helping with the Martin Luther King Jr. committee; creating a full-time jazz flute ensemble and exposing students to jazz music.

Wilson said his greatest accomplishment, though, was none of these.

"My greatest accomplishment was getting the whole nation to hear a little bit about K-State and jazz," Wilson said.

K-State students had the opportunity to play their music on the No. 1 national public jazz radio show, "Jazz Set."

Paul Hunt, head of the Department of Music, said his department wishes him the best.

"It's a great opportunity for him at Michigan," he said.

The College of Arts and Sciences deans could not be reached for comment.

Wilson said he has enjoyed his last year at K-State as an assistant dean, but that the University of Michigan would give him the opportunity to work with music, not only teaching it, but also creating his own.

Wilson said leaving K-State was a good decision, but it would be hard to do.

"I don't know what I'm going to do with all of these purple clothes when I get to Michigan," Wilson said. "I've been a Wildcat a long time. And I've loved it and my students."

Wilson thanks co-workers for positive years at K-State

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dennis Wilson, assistant dean of arts and sciences, said that in leaving K-State for a position at the University of Michigan, there were several people to thank.

"There's been some people that have been really wonderful to me while at K-State," he said. "Of those, there are some that I will especially miss."

Jon and Ruth Ann Wefald, K-State president and his wife; Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium; Jack Flouer and Bob Edwards, professors of music; and Peter Nicholls, dean of arts and sciences; Joy Gustin, office assistant for the College of Arts and Sciences; Kathy Greene, director of education and personal development; Talat Rahman and Chris Sorenson, professors of physics, were several names he mentioned.

K-State Student Union Director Bernard Pitts, Wilson said, was a favorite of his to work with.

"I have loved working with Bernard," Wilson said. "He is first-class."

He also said that working with Juanita McGowan, director of American ethnic studies, was a privilege.

Wilson said these people helped to make working at K-State a positive experience for him.

"These are the people I definitely want to thank," Wilson said.

Microsoft ruling delayed pending appeal

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The federal judge, acceding to the government's request, on Tuesday postponed ruling on Microsoft's motion of a stay of antitrust remedies he had imposed against the software manufacturer.

As the government asked, U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson decided to withhold judgment on the stay until the company files its promised notice of appeal.

In a one-sentence order, Jackson said consideration of a stay pending appeal is premature in that no notice of appeal has yet been filed.

The government had urged Jackson on Monday to reject Microsoft's motion to stay the penalties he imposed, including a proposal to break the company into two parts. It said any substantial delay in the judge's order would greatly damage the public interest.

But the department's antitrust division also asked Jackson to briefly delay denying the stay to thwart what it called Microsoft's bid to manipulate the court. It urged Jackson not to rule on the stay until Microsoft files its promised notice of appeal and then to rule on both together.

Earlier Tuesday, Microsoft filed a response with Jackson, claiming that the Justice Department was trying to toy with the company's procedural rights in order to make it easier to take the appeal directly to the U.S. Supreme Court — a move Microsoft opposes.

The company said it was also concerned about the time the government was taking.

"That delay has already consumed five of the 90 days provided by the court before the wide-ranging relief specified in the judgment begins to take effect," Microsoft wrote in its brief.

The government said the company is trying to maneuver part of the case into the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia where it won an earlier battle in the case.

The exchange of legal volleys in the drawn-out case came in the wake of Jackson's decision June 7 ordering the software giant split into two companies.

The Justice Department wants Microsoft's appeal to go directly to the Supreme Court, bypassing the circuit court. But it cannot file that motion until the company files its notice of appeal, which Microsoft has not done.

After finding that the company abused its monopoly over personal computer operating systems to harm consumers and thwart innovation, Jackson ordered the company split into two and imposed restrictions on Microsoft's business conduct while it appeals the dismemberment.

The government said Microsoft's lawyers have told department lawyers that the company will not file the notice of appeal until after Jackson rules on the stay, so that it can then simultaneously file a lengthy and detailed motion for a stay in the Court of Appeals.

This plan, the government said, was designed by Microsoft to put the question of a stay before the circuit court while Jackson was still ruling on the government's bid to send the appeal directly to the Supreme Court. The move is simply an attempt to manipulate the court and thwart the operation of the Expediting Act, which allows a direct appeal to the Supreme Court, the government told Jackson.

To speed simultaneous consideration by Jackson of the stay and its bid to bypass the circuit court, the Justice Department attached a copy of the motion it intends to file for expedited appeal.

That document said Jackson should send the case directly to the Supreme Court, because consumers should not have to wait too long for the benefits of competition to be restored.

Even if Microsoft were to win on appeal, the public interest would be served because a prompt Supreme Court decision would end uncertainty facing Microsoft's employees, stockholders and firms in the technology industry and throughout the economy that do business with it, the government said.

Meantime, the government said Microsoft's one-page stay motion did not even address two of the four required points: the public interest and whether there was a likelihood the company would win on appeal.

The company did argue denying a stay would harm Microsoft and not harm the plaintiffs, but the government said the company offered no supporting evidence.

The company had argued that radical changes like Jackson ordered ought to be stayed until appeals courts decide whether the company did abuse its monopoly and whether the remedy is appropriate.

But the government noted that the division of Microsoft into two companies — one for operating systems and the other for other software and Internet properties — already was delayed by Jackson until the outcome of the appeal so the stay would apply only to Jackson's interim restrictions on the company's business practices, which are due to take effect in 90 days.

DNA from old postage stamp could help solve 1984 murder

PARIS — DNA testing on a 16-year-old postage stamp may help identify "the Crow," the mysterious suspect in the drowning murder of a 4-year-old boy, one of France's most sordid crimes.

A French court on Wednesday ordered genetic testing on the stamp to help unmask "the Crow," who claimed responsibility in a letter for the drowning of "Petit Gregory," or "Little Gregory," as the child became known throughout France. The letter was sent to the boy's grandparents.

The boy's body was found in the Vologne River in the eastern Vosges region on Oct. 16, 1984. His hands and feet were bound.

North, South Korean leaders work toward reconciliation

SEOUL, South Korea — In the region's biggest step toward peace in 50 years, the leaders of North and South Korea signed an agreement Wednesday pledging to work toward reconciliation and eventual reunification.

The two leaders also agreed to allow reunions of families that have been separated by the closed and heavily armed border, to hold another summit meeting and to promote South Korean investment that is desperately needed in the North's failing economy.

Doubt cast on suicide theory in EgyptAir crash, report says

WASHINGTON D.C. — New findings from the flight data recorder of EgyptAir Flight 990 cast doubt on the theory that the crash, which killed all 217 aboard, was caused deliberately by a suicidal pilot, according to Aviation Week magazine.

An article on the magazine's Internet site, AviationNow.com, says the new data is included in the accident's docket, a set of detailed reports prepared on every aspect of a crash. It is part of the public record and the docket on the EgyptAir case is expected to be released by the end of July.

Administration split on bill about classified information

WASHINGTON D.C. — Administrative officials are divided on Senate legislation to make disclosing classified information to the news media a felony punishable by up to three years in prison, officials said Wednesday.

Attorney General Janet Reno opposed the legislation at Wednesday's closed-door Senate Intelligence Committee session, while CIA Director George Tenet testified for it.

Senate approves CIA official for nuclear weapons agency

WASHINGTON D.C. — Spurred by another security breach at the Los Alamos weapons lab, the Senate swiftly confirmed the No. 2 man at the CIA to head a new nuclear weapons agency within the Energy Department.

Air Force Gen. John A. Gordon, now deputy CIA director, won unanimous confirmation Wednesday after his nomination had been held up for months.

U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear Microsoft's appeals

SEATTLE — Microsoft has won a preliminary victory as it jockeys for position with the Justice Department in the appeal of the software giant's antitrust case.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Tuesday that a full complement of its judges would hear Microsoft's appeal at the first opportunity. The court has been sympathetic to the company in previous rulings.

The company had asked the appeals court to stay U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson's order requiring not only the breakup of the company, but also many restrictions on its business practices that are to take effect Sept. 6.

Fires sweep Denver area

■ Drought conditions shape up fire season as worst since 1996.

By STEVE GUTTERMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONIFER, Colo. — The ranks of firefighters grew to nearly 890 Wednesday as crews attacked two wildfires that have destroyed at least 44 homes and burned 13,000 acres in the Rocky Mountain foothills near Denver.

Many of the estimated 800 people who have been evacuated from their homes watched from ridges and roads as planes dropped fire retardant and helicopters dumped water on the flames.

The firefighters were helped by lower temperatures and lighter winds on the rocky, tree-covered slopes, where the flames gobbled up dry timber and brush.

By midday, one of the fires, about 35 miles southwest of Denver, had burned 6,600 acres and destroyed 39 homes scattered through subdivisions built into the steep mountainside.

In the tree-lined canyons east of Rocky Mountain National Park, a second fire had destroyed about 6,600 acres and at least five homes.

Many homeowners received little notice when the flames flared Monday. People fled with what items they could gather in an hour or less.

"My smoke alarms were going off the smoke was so thick," Chris Brock said. "I was watering the house, grabbing more stuff, putting it in the truck."

She let two horses out of their corral and brought three dogs with her down the mountainside.

On a ridge near Conifer, anxious residents watched as smoldering areas erupted in flames and were slowly engulfed.

"You feel so helpless," said Mary Sousa, watching with her husband, Rick, and 8-year-old daughter, Kelly.

Elsewhere, erratic wind fanned two wildfires in northern New Mexico. A lightning-caused fire near Questa had burned 1,000 acres by Wednesday, while a 500-acre fire near Mora led authorities to urge 33 families to get out.

And in northern California, a fire pushed by gusty wind and triple-digit temperatures had burned through 2,500 acres on hillsides in Napa Valley. Forty homes were evacuated Tuesday.

The fire season is shaping up as the worst since 1996, according to the National Interagency Fire Center in Idaho. It began more than a month ago with blazes engulfing areas of Florida and the Southwest, most notably at Los Alamos, N.M.

Some 44,300 fires covering more than 1.2 million acres have been recorded nationwide so far, with drought conditions getting worse in the west.

Sunflower State games deadline for discounted rates approaches

By PETER ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The deadline to enter the Sunflower State Games at a discount rate is closing fast.

The 11th-annual games in Lawrence on July 21-23 and 28-30 will feature 27 different team and individual sports. These sports are divided into a variety of age groups. Most of the sports will feature a special college-aged division, Vicki Hill, executive director, said.

All entries wanting to receive the Early Bird discount must be received by Monday.

For the first time, athletes are able to register for the games online at the games' official Web site, www.sunflowergames.org. All information is available on the Web site.

The games tend to draw a lot of people from all over the state, Hill said.

"Last year, over 8,000 athletes competed," Hill said. "We are hoping for more this year."

"The games give you an opportunity to play against people that you have not played against before."

The college division tends to be competitive, Hill said. Last year's women's college basketball division featured 12 teams, with athletes from many different college teams.

Another big sport for the games is wrestling, which is offered for all age groups. Wrestling is one sport that most aren't able to compete in after high school or college, Hill said, which is one reason why it is so popular in the college and above divisions. This year's wrestling competition will be at the air-conditioned Free State High School.

Medals will be awarded to the top-three finishers in each division. Athletes who place will be invited to the State Games of America, the national competition next summer in St. Louis, if the sport they participated in is offered at the national competition, Hill said.

The games also offer entertainment for the family. The games will feature the Family Fun Fest on the lot next to Allen Fieldhouse. The Fun Fest will have free food and is sponsored by WIBW-FM 97.3.

Available this year on the Web site is a Kansas Sports Calendar. The calendar posts year-round listings of competitions across the state of Kansas.

Army Reserve colonel accused of espionage during Cold War

By VICKIE CHACHERE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — A retired Army Reserve colonel was arrested Wednesday and accused of spying for the Soviet Union during a 25-year Cold War conspiracy while he worked in Germany.

The U.S. Attorney's Office identified him as George Trofimoff. It said he conspired to sell classified military intelligence information to the Soviets when he was a civilian employee of the Army.

Trofimoff was indicted by federal grand jury in Tampa, Fla. The indictment was unsealed Wednesday, after he was arrested.

Trofimoff obtained the classified information while serving as a civilian chief of the U.S. Army element of the Nuremberg Joint Interrogation Center in Germany from 1969 to 1994, prosecutors said.

Trofimoff also served in the Army Reserve, retiring as a colonel in 1987.

He had served several years in the regular Army before entering the Army Reserve in the 1950s.

Trofimoff, who lived in Melbourne, Fla., retired from his Army civilian employment in 1995, after 35 years.

He was born in Germany to Russian parents and was naturalized as a U.S. citizen in 1951.

He is the highest-ranking U.S. military officer ever charged with espionage, federal prosecutors said. He had access to all classified information received or produced by the Nuremberg center.

A hearing before a U.S. magistrate judge was set for midafternoon.

The case will be prosecuted in Tampa, said Steve Cole, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Tampa's MacDill Air Force base is home to the U.S. Central Command, which directed the Gulf War in 1991.

MacDill is also home to the U.S. Special Operations Command.

Florida has been the scene of other Cold War espionage cases.

Ernst Ludwig Forbrich, 43, was convicted in 1984 in Tampa on two counts of espionage and was sentenced to 15 years in federal prison.

Forbrich, a resident of the former West Germany, was convicted of trying to buy U.S. military secrets on behalf of East Germany.

In 1982, U.S. Army Warrant Officer Joseph George Helmich confessed in the midst of his espionage trial in Jacksonville, Fla. to selling military secrets to the Soviet Union.

Helmich admitted to contacting Soviet agents in Paris in 1963, when he was facing a possible court-martial because of bad checks. He was sentenced to life in prison.

Big Red HISTORY

STORY BY ANGELA KISTNER

Nearby post offers glimpse of past

A red and white water tower can be seen from Interstate 70 announcing the location of The Big Red One of Fort Riley.

But more than just the 1st Infantry Division can be found at Fort Riley. A day trip to the Army base can be a lesson in Kansas history.

William McKale, Fort Riley museum specialist and historian, said Fort Riley has about 55,000 visitors a year to its three museums — the U.S. Cavalry Museum, Fort Riley Regimental Museum and Custer House.

"We have visitors from all over the world," McKale said. "We probably hit all 50 states sometime throughout the year."

Fort Riley is about 101,000 acres. In 1853, it was a post of about 23,000 acres, but it expanded in World War II, almost doubling in size. After Milford Lake was constructed in the 1960s, Fort Riley doubled again.

Places of note for Fort Riley visitors

U.S. Cavalry Museum: Built in 1854, this building was once the post hospital. It houses lifelike displays of the American Horse Soldier and shows its role in American history. Open 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday-Saturday and noon to 4:30 p.m. Sunday

1st Infantry Division Museum: Contains exhibits depicting the history of the 1st Infantry Division from 1917 to the present. Open 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday-Saturday and noon to 4:30 p.m. Sunday

Custer Guided House Tour: Built in 1855, it is representative of the quarters Gen. George A. Custer and his wife, Libby, lived in when they were stationed at Fort Riley. Open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday-Saturday and noon to 4 p.m. Sunday (Memorial Day until Labor Day)

Wyman Park: Site of an old Union Pacific steam locomotive. Visitors can climb aboard and imagine riding the rails of the West.

First Territorial Capitol: The first Kansas Territorial Legislature met in this building from July 2 to 6, 1855. Open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday-Saturday and 1-5 p.m. Sunday

Kaw River Nature Walk: This one-mile trail along the Kansas River is closed for repairs but will reopen around July 15.

Note: Two weeks' notice is required for guided tours

Although 80 percent of the visitors to Fort Riley have a connection with the military, civilians are welcome, too. McKale said 20 percent of the visitors are tour groups and people just passing on the interstate.

Other sites that can be seen on Fort Riley's driving tour include the first Territorial Capitol of Kansas, the Great War Memorial, the Buffalo Corral, the Post Cemetery, and the Old Trooper Statue and Chief's Grave. Chief was the last cavalry mount registered to the U.S. government.

Maj. Scott Price, community relations officer, said tourists also can see a unit training, sit in a tank or dine in what used to be called a Mess Hall, but they have to give 60 days notice.

"We're happy to give them, but we have to interrupt the unit's training so we need notice," he said. "We try to be user friendly here because it's taxpayer's money, and they work hard for their money."

Price said Fort Riley had 914 requests last year for tours, which was up from 661 in 1998. He said tourists also can request a bus for their driving tour. The bus tour would take the tourists over the historic main post district, which is 11 square acres of 227 historical limestone buildings. On the bus tour, tourists also will learn about famous people, including Harry Truman and Joe Lewis, who were trained at Fort Riley.

"There's obviously a lot of history here to see," McKale said. "Instead of packing up and going halfway across the country, there's history in your backyard and in some cases your front yard."

There also is a golf course that is open to the public, Custer Hill Golf Course. McKale said one of the most famous golf course architects, Robert Trent Jones Jr., designed the front nine.

"It's a pretty special historic golf course and pretty challenging," he said.

Price said there are few places people cannot wander into, and that's mainly because of safety considerations.

"This is the home of the American Army," he said. "And the Army welcomes here day and night."

Ultra-wideband devices see through objects

By KALPANA SRINIVASAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Thought only cartoon superheroes could see through walls to detect the villains?

New technology called ultra-wideband soon will allow mere mortals to detect objects buried underground and to build cars enhanced with sensors that help avoid collisions.

Ultra-wideband uses millions of narrow pulses each second to get an accurate reading of location and distance, opening the door for new applications in radar tracking, precise positioning and wireless communications.

The possibilities vary from short-range computer networking to devices that determine the location of golfers on a course.

What regulators like even better is that ultra-wideband devices can work within frequencies already allocated for other radio services — helping to maximize this dwindling resource.

The Federal Communications Commission believes the technology is so promising that the agency has proposed allowing it to be used on an unlicensed basis.

"Because of improvements in technology, it is now time to take a look at making this service available to consumers, businesses and public safety providers," FCC Chairman William Kennard said.

It could be a year or more before the FCC gives final clearance. First, government agencies and private groups are testing to make sure ultra-wideband can safely coexist with other services, such as the Global Positioning System, the U.S.-built network of satellites for navigation.

Officials want to put to rest any concerns about interference and could require the technology to be used above congested frequencies, said John Reed, senior engineer in the FCC's technical rules branch.

Still, the technology is being touted for its ability to harness a small amount of power efficiently. Ultra-wideband devices can emit such little energy that it could interfere no more "than your laptop does with your TV," said Ralph Petroff, chief executive officer of Time Domain Corp., a Huntsville, Ala.-based company. The company is one of a handful that has received special government waivers to begin using the technology.

Time Domain already has developed some ultra-wideband products which allow law enforcement officials to detect motions through surfaces such as walls. That means firefighters could determine whether there are people inside a room before they knock down a door.

In Fairfax, Va., members of the local county rescue squad were able to see people still breathing under 12 feet of rubble using the devices after a building collapse, Petroff said.

Newer versions to be introduced in the fall will provide even clearer silhouettes.

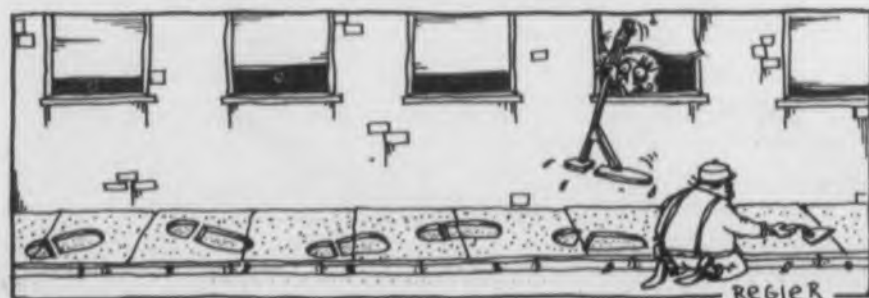

Petroff says the chief benefit of ultra-wideband "is the ability to create entirely new products that don't yet exist and entirely new industries."

Indeed, a separate company has cropped up that intends to use ultra-wideband specifically for the golf industry, so that club owners can detect the location of golfers on a course and even see how quickly players move through the holes.

Zircon, a Silicon Valley company that also has a waiver to use ultra-wideband, makes handheld tools that can detect studs about an inch and a half behind a wall before consumers begin drilling. But ultra-wideband could scan to greater depths, possibly even providing a three-dimensional image of what's inside a slab of concrete, said Chuck Heger, the company's vice president of research and development.

Kansans battle fuel costs

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last thing Mike Shannon wants to do is raise his prices. But unfortunately, he knows if something doesn't change soon, he might not have a choice.

Shannon, traffic manager at Steel and Pipe Supply Co., is concerned with the rising gas prices.

"We've absorbed the costs here at Steel and Pipe," he said. "I don't know how much longer we can do that."

Steel and Pipe, a large Midwest steel distributor, worries about what will happen if oil prices continue to increase.

"If we had to raise our prices to pay for fuel the end user of the steel would also have to pay," Shannon said. "It's a domino effect."

With Kansas gas prices lingering between $1.60 to $1.80, people statewide have become increasingly concerned with what will result.

Terry Kastens, crop production and farm management specialist, said in the short run, the increases only hurt the direct fuel users.

"Farmers and truckers can't get past these costs easily," he said.

"Truckers are committed to hauling freight for a certain price, so when they have higher fuel costs, they can't raise prices until the contract runs out. Even then, they still have to be competitive and won't always be able to raise prices."

Farmers spend an average of $7,500 to $8,000 per year on gas. A farm that size is netting an average income of about $38,000. If fuel prices rise another 50 percent, farmers will be forced to spend an additional $4,000, Kastens said.

"It takes it right out of their bottom line — their net income," he said.

Kastens said consumers do not need to worry about rising grocery prices yet. Gas prices would need to stay consistent for at least another year before the domino effect sets in.

Gas prices aren't only affecting businesses, though. Drivers also feel the pressure of increased prices.

Corey Isbell, a teacher at Manhattan High School, lives in Wamego and commutes. He said he drives more than 60 miles a day during the summer and spends anywhere from $40 to $60 a month on gas.

"It's putting a big dent in the pocketbook," Isbell said. "Between teaching and coaching and driving back and forth and back and forth, it adds up."

The money has started adding up so much that Isbell is considering moving to Manhattan despite the drawbacks he used to see.

"It's a little more expensive to live in Manhattan," he said. "But with how much I've been spending on gas, I don't even care."

However, the future of oil prices looks brighter, Kastens said.

"I expect fuel prices to fall again by the end of the summer," he said.

"They won't fall back to the levels of a year ago when we were spending 90 cents to a $1 per gallon, but they will fall."

Kastens said $1.20 to $1.30 is a reasonable estimate.

As people continue to speculate on oil, most realize their only option is to wait the high prices out.

Shannon said he hopes the problem will be resolved before too long.

"It's hurting right now," he said. "It's hurting everybody."

"If they don't get a handle on these prices, ultimately it will affect the consumer."

Gas/electric hybrid offers alternative for fuel-conscious

By JIM REINTJES
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Driving a car from Kansas City, Mo., to Denver, passing up every gas station along the way and still having enough fuel to approach the Wyoming border is possible, all on less than 11 gallons of gas.

Honda's new Insight, which gets 65 miles per gallon in the city and 70 mpg on the highway, can do just that. The Insight is powered by a 1.0 liter 3-cylinder gasoline-electric hybrid power plant that produces a total of 73 horsepower. There is no need to plug in the Insight's electric motor for recharging.

The Insight's aerodynamic shape, its aluminum body and a curb weight of less than 1,900 pounds also contribute to its high fuel economy, according to a Honda sales brochure.

Little Apple Toyota Honda had its first Insight for only 10 days.

"Someone drove by, saw it, and it was what they wanted," said Ron Barrett, a sales representative at Little Apple Toyota Honda.

Barrett said the Insight is not an easy car to get, with the dealership getting two more this year.

"A dealership in Nebraska wanted to buy our Insight," he said.

Art Garner, manager of public relations for Honda said Honda has sold 1,200 Insights and production will total 6,500. He said there is a waiting list of three to four months for the Insight. Honda will produce 6,500 for 2001, he said.

The Insight costs less than $21,000 and is only available with a 5-speed manual transmission and two seats.

The increasing gas prices have not affected sales of pickups and sport utility vehicles, though, said Jim Gaidos, sales manager at Dick Edwards in Manhattan.

"I don't have customers concerned about it yet," Gaidos said.

Gaidos, who has been selling cars for 25 years, said he lived through the gas crises in the 1970s.

"Every single person asked about fuel economy back then," Gaidos said. "People were trading in bigger cars and trucks for smaller models."

He said he hasn't seen any evidence of people trading in bigger vehicles for smaller vehicles since the increase in gas prices.

"I can't see any change in business from six months ago when gas was a $1.10," Gaidos said. "Maybe business could be better if gas prices were reasonable."

Things aren't much different at Jon Murdock Auto Mall in Manhattan.

"As of today, we'll take every Suburban and Tahoe we can get because people are still buying them," Joe Gudenkauf, general manager, said.

Derek Lee, assistant finance manager and sales consultant at Little Apple Toyota Honda, said customers hadn't asked about fuel economy until recently.

Six months ago, people didn't ask about gas mileage," Lee said. "Now its starting to become an issue."

State Board of Education approves transfer of land

By JOHN HANNA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The State Board of Education approved a transfer of land to the Abilene school district over the objections of the district that is losing the territory.

The Abilene district petitioned the board to transfer 84.5 square miles in northwest Dickinson County from the Chapman school district. Chapman officials opposed the transfer, and residents of the affected area appeared split.

The board voted 6-4 Wednesday in favor of the transfer, even though a hearing officer of the board appointed to review Abilene's petition recommended that the board reject it.

The transfer will cost the Chapman district about one-seventh of its territory and possibly $192,000 in state funds from the loss of 40 students. The Abilene district, smaller geographically but larger in terms of its enrollment, will more than double in size.

The request from the Abilene district for the land transfer followed a November decision by the Chapman district to close its elementary school in Talmage, northwest of Abilene, and transfer students to two other schools.

The land transfer wouldn't keep the Talmage school open, but some area parents note that Abilene schools would be closer.

"I've got to give a greater emphasis to the substantial and weighty nature of closing a school," said board member Steve Abrams, of Arkansas City, who voted to approve the transfer.

Dale Dennis, deputy education commissioner, said the board typically deals with one or two proposed land transfers a year. He said the Abilene-Chapman dispute is unusual because most often the two districts involved in a transfer sign an agreement first.

The four board members voting no were Val DeFever, of Independence; Sonny Rundell, of Syracuse; Bill Wagon, of Topeka; and Janet Waugh, of Kansas City, Kan.

They sided with parents in the area who wanted to remain in the Chapman school district.

"If you take the kids out of Chapman, you're going to put them someplace where they don't want to be at first," Stan Thomas, a Talmage resident and parent of a ninth-grader, told the board Tuesday.

Pamela Britt, a Talmage resident who serves on the Chapman Board of Education, said some residents in the area initially supported the transfer in emotional turmoil, hoping to keep the Talmage school there open but have since changed their minds.

However, Danny Wuthnow, a resident of Manchester, about four miles northwest of Talmage, said the two other schools to which the Chapman district would send students after closing the Talmage school are 14 miles and 24 miles from his home.

"With the land transfer, we would have the opportunity to send our children to a stable and much closer school," said Wuthnow, a father of six children, ages 8 - 17.

The Abilene district now covers 77.3 square miles and would grow to 161.8 square miles under the transfer. The Chapman district would see its size drop by about 15 percent, from 574.2 square miles to 489.7 square miles.

The Abilene district had 1,533 students enrolled during the past school year. The figure for Chapman was 1,251.

New standards for teachers in Kansas approved, reflect board's change in attitude

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — New licensing regulations designed to make sure teachers are prepared and perform well in their jobs won approval Wednesday from the State Board of Education.

The board's vote was unanimous. It began work on revising the regulations in 1992.

Most of the new regulations will take effect in 2003.

The new standards also reflect a change in attitude, replacing several terms used by the Department of Education with new ones.

For example, the state now awards certificates to teachers but will grant licenses instead under the new regulations.

Education Commissioner Andy Tompkins said that language change will help make teaching similar to other professions. He also said it would help Kansas enter into agreements that allow Kansas teachers to teach in other states.

"One of the big issues facing all of us is portability," Tompkins said.

Under the new regulations, conditional licenses for new teachers will be for two years instead of three. Teachers also must have a cumulative 2.5 grade point average on a 4.0 scale in college and pass tests on teaching knowledge and subject matter.

Those requirements are the same as current ones, except new teachers now must pass a test on basic skills instead of subject matter.

A proposal for the new regulations would have required a 2.75 grade point average, but the board voted 6-4 to keep it at 2.5.

Board member Scott Hill said he proposed the change because educators had told the board that there is no correlation between teaching performance and grade point average.

"When you raise that, it becomes an artificial barrier," Hill, of Abilene, said.

The new regulations also would require teachers to hold a conditional license and pass a performance test before obtaining an unrestricted — or professional — license.

Teachers now must hold an initial certificate and teach for two years in an accredited school before receiving a five-year professional certificate, but they do not have to pass a performance test.

The new regulations also include changes to several subject areas in which teachers may be licensed.

Family establishes scholarship

Pat and Susan Bosco have made a $10,000 commitment to the KSU Foundation to establish the Pat and Susan Bosco Family Scholarship.

The scholarship will be awarded to any student who meets the minimum requirements of the achievement scholarship program at K-State.

Pat Bosco is the associate vice president for institutional advancement at K-State and dean of student life.

Estate donation provides scholarship

A $65,000 gift from the estate of Fred E. Walle, Salina, Kan., who died Jan. 6, has been received by the KSU Foundation. It will establish the Fred E. and Marjorie H. Walle Scholarship.

The scholarship will provide financial assistance for Saline or Ottawa County students with an agricultural background. Both academic achievement and financial need will be strongly considered when selecting recipients.

Scholarship to honor former alumnus

A gift of more than $20,000 to the KSU Foundation has been made by Norma L. Kuhn, Merriam, Kan., to establish the Cleo Harvey Kuhn Scholarship.

The scholarship will honor Kuhn's late husband, who graduated from K-State in 1951 with a degree in agricultural economics, and provide financial assistance to students in the College of Agriculture.

Fund set up for Decatur high graduates

Delbert L. Townsend, Fort Washington, Md., has made a commitment of $550,000 to the KSU Foundation to establish the Colonel Delbert L. Townsend Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship fund will provide financial assistance to Decatur Community High School graduates. The scholarship will cover tuition, books and fees for four years. Funds also will be provided for a personal computer.

Col. Townsend graduated from K-State in 1942 with a bachelors degree in agricultural economics.

TKE alumni donate to scholarship fund

Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity alumni made a gift of $10,000 to the KSU Foundation to establish the M.J. Harbaugh Scholarship.

The scholarship will provide financial assistance to members of the TKE fraternity who best exemplify TKE's academic standards.

Harbaugh joined K-State as an instructor in 1929 and attained the rank of professor in 1945.

Storm causes power outages; high winds destroy 2 homes

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Parts of Junction City were left without electricity Wednesday after thunderstorms with winds clocked as high as 58 mph tore through the town Tuesday evening, causing severe wind damage, officials said.

Chief Deputy Major Jim Jensen of the Geary County Police Department said more than half of the homes in Junction City lost electricity Tuesday night.

Most homes were restored later in the evening, while some were left in the dark.

Two mobile homes were destroyed by the storm, while several houses received roof and shingle damage.

Several trees also were knocked down, Jensen said.

"The homes were old and weak in structure," he said. "Pretty much destroyed."

Milford Lake, right outside of Junction City, received the brunt of the storm, though, Jensen said.

Winds reached up to 70 mph and several power lines and trees were knocked down.

"There's not a tree up here that doesn't have wind damage," he said.

No injuries were reported in Junction City or Milford Lake, Jensen said.

Damages in Manhattan were minimal, said Mike Fassey, dispatcher with Riley County Police Department.

"It's nothing tremendous," he said. "Some broken down trees, limbs."

Southern Baptist Convention strikes out at women pastors

By JULIA LIEBLICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Risking a wider split in the nation's largest Protestant denomination, the Southern Baptist Convention declared Wednesday that women should no longer serve as pastors.

The statement of faith is not binding on congregations, and so the effect on the Southern Baptists' 1,600 or so clergywomen — about 100 of whom are pastors leading congregations — is unclear.

Some members warned that congregations will quit the 15.9 million-member denomination over this, just as some did when the Southern Baptists declared two years ago that wives should "submit graciously" to their husbands.

"I'm very sad," said the Rev. Martha Phillips, interim pastor at Mount Vernon Baptist Church in Arlington, Va., where Vice President Al Gore is a member. "Women ministers are not going to have a place in Southern Baptist life anymore. I think more churches will leave."

The revised Faith and Message statement was approved in a show of hands by the thousands of delegates at the denomination's annual meeting.

It includes a passage that reads: "While both men and women are gifted for service in the church, the office of pastor is limited to men as qualified by Scripture." The previous statement, dating to 1963, was silent on the issue.

"Southern Baptists, by practice as well as conviction, believe leadership is male," said the Rev. Adrian Rogers, chairman of the drafting committee.

The new statement does not address whether women should be ordained, something the Southern Baptists have done since at least 1964. It addresses only their role as pastors, who lead congregations.

Individual Southern Baptists and the faith's 42,000 congregations would remain free to ordain women and hire them as pastors.

"If you are a Baptist, as long as there are congregations who have the courage to follow the will of God, there will be a place for woman pastors," said the Rev. Julie Pennington-Russell, who leads the congregation of Calvary Baptist Church in Waco, Texas.

"A lot of churches are just going to ignore it," said David Key, director of Baptist studies at Emory University in Atlanta.

In time, he said, fewer women will be available to serve as pastors because they will have left the denomination or felt discouraged from leading congregations.

The Southern Baptists' passage of the statement reflects a rightward shift in recent years that has included a boycott of Disney over its "gay-friendly" policies and a 1998 statement declaring that "a wife is to submit herself graciously to the servant leadership of her husband."

That was the last straw for about a dozen congregations that quit the denomination.

Approval of the men-only pastor clause probably will drive out more congregations, said the Rev. Daniel Vestal of Atlanta, coordinator for a group of 2,000 theologically moderate congregations.

The newly elected president of the Southern Baptists, James G. Merritt, a 47-year-old conservative from Snellville, Ga., responded by saying: "I don't fear a split. I don't even fear a splinter."

Other changes in the revised statement underscore that the Bible is "totally true" and insist that "there is no salvation apart from personal faith in Jesus Christ as Lord." It also urges Christians to oppose racism and reject abortion and homosexuality.

Outside the convention, 100 or so gay protesters marched with signs that said "Stop Spiritual Violence." More than two dozen were arrested.

The first to be arrested was the Rev. Ed Harris, 65, a retired Southern Baptist pastor who acknowledged his homosexuality in the 1990s.

"The Southern Baptists were my guide into my spiritual life, and I'm very grateful, but the church is causing too much emotional abuse to gay people," he said.

"We're not sick and we're not sinful."

KU graduate student unearths 65-million-year-old dinosaur

LAWRENCE — A University of Kansas graduate student and a small digging team from Kansas have unearthed fossil bones from what is believed to be a 65-million-year-old Tyrannosaurus rex.

Craig Sundell identified the skeleton in April that was found in east-central Wyoming by a rancher on his field. Sundell and his team have found eight teeth and half the skull and ribs of the skeleton. The slow, full-scale excavation began two weeks ago, and Sundell said he hopes when the dig is done, the skeleton is complete.

Resurrecting a complete skeleton would be a first — of the roughly 25 Tyrannosaurus fossils unearthed worldwide, none are complete.

Wal-Mart to appeal court's award to Hutchinson woman

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Wal-Mart officials vow to appeal a jury's award of $520,000 in damages to a woman who fell and injured herself at a Hutchinson Wal-Mart.

The woman, Beulah Foster, broke an arm and was left crippled by damage to her rotator cuff after the July 1997 accident. She also suffered severe facial damage.

A U.S. District Court jury in Kansas City, Kan., awarded her the money June 9.

PUBLIC PRAYER VIOLATES DIVISION OF CHURCH, STATE

Praying over a public announcement system before a high school football game should be prohibited, just as the Supreme Court ruled in its decision Monday.

Just as the Supreme Court ruled, it violates the constitutionally required separation of church and state, and doesn't constitute as freedom of speech. When it involves a public school, freedom of speech does not include religion, unless it is private speech. Praying over a public announcement system to crowds of people is anything but private.

Religion should not be involved in a public school. It imposes beliefs on everyone, and everyone is not Christian. Yes, the prayer that was subject to the ruling was student-initiated and lead, but not all students have the same beliefs. Those in the minority should not have to sit in the stands at their own high school football game listening to a prayer that conflicts with their beliefs. That's for church — not school activities.

If students feel the need to pray before a football game, they should do so individually. Many schools observe a moment of silence before games, which is a good idea. Those who want to pray can, and those who don't, don't have to. Not everyone is Christian, so not everyone should be subjected to praying as one.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Columnist shares ideas from NRA to dog food

The following are a group of short ideas that have been running around in my head. Individually, none are more than a few sentences. Collectively, I might be able to squeeze out a whole column.

1) The Summer Olympics this year are going to be in Australia, but it's going to be winter there.

2) Many have questioned the sanity of the National Rifle Association, but the fact that the NRA is proposing to build a firearm theme-restaurant on Times Square in New York City is sure proof that these people are completely scramble-brained. How can anyone possibly imagine this to be appetizing?

("We'll have the tortilla clips with Glock-mole, the Sig-n-Saur chicken salad, the 38-Calibur with Saturday Nite Special Sauce, two Colt 45 malt liquors and for dessert, an order of chocolate Brownings al ammo.")

One has to be absolutely devoid of any sense whatsoever to even have the thought cross one's mind of establishing such a restaurant in a city that has suffered more than its fair share of gun violence. Perhaps in Dallas, but not NYC.

Now being a proponent of moderate gun control, I believe that normal law-abiding citizens should be able to possess firearms. I further believe as a proponent of moderate gun control that membership in the NRA should automatically exclude a person from gun ownership.

3) Have you ever tasted dog food? It's worse than crap. Even the so-called doggy treats taste like ass. It's no wonder dogs prefer people food over their own slop.

That's why my dog gets the table scraps. Over and above any health or behavioral issues involved in feeding dogs people food, there exists a quality-of-life issue. If any creature knows what it's like to live a dog's life, it's a dog. I don't care if it foreshortens my dog's life, while in this plane of existence, my dog is going to continue to enjoy the pleasure of licking my dishes clean before I place them back on the shelf.

4) Continuing on with what dogs like to eat — when I have lived with both dogs and cats simultaneously, I've found it near impossible to keep any dog out of the kitty litter box. To a dog, cat excrement is ambrosia. (Personally, I've never tried the stuff, so I wouldn't know.)

The reason why dogs chase cats is not to catch the cat; it's only to scare the crap out of it.

Instead of making dog food that tastes like osso buco or coq au vin, they should make feline-feces flavor.

5) I saw a "Sesame Street" bit once that parodied Samuel Beckett's play "Waiting for Godot." Afterwards, when I went out to tell others of this bizarre TV occurrence, I was surprised to find out that no one knew of Beckett's play.

"Waiting for Godot" is one of the seminal works of twentieth-century theater. How could anyone not know of it?

The drama was unique in that the play was about nothing. Absolutely nothing happens.

BECKY WILSON/COLLEGIAN

I finally realized that people that were unfamiliar with "Waiting for Godot" were truly not missing anything.

7) I conduct my research over in biochemistry.

Not many Americans seem to want to study biochemistry. I estimate that the department is 48-percent native Indian (i.e. from India), 48-percent native Chinese and only 4-percent American. My lab is predominantly Chinese.

Since I'm in the minority, I've taken it upon myself to learn some Chinese. For example, if one was to ask if another had a particular object, one would say, "Nee yo 'the object's name' ma?" For example, to ask, "Do you have the hydrochloric acid?" one would say, "Nee yo hydrochloric acid ma?"

One day, a group of us went out to lunch at Hunan Chinese Restaurant. I wanted a pair of chopsticks, and I thought this to be a perfect opportunity to practice some of my Chinese.

So I asked the waitress, "Nee yo qui-its ma?" A look of bewilderment swept over her face. I figured I caught her off guard and that she didn't expect a white guy to say something in Chinese with a bad accent. So I repeated slowly, "Nee yo qui-its ma?"

The waitress stared my straight in the eyes and said in perfect Midwestern English, "I don't speak Chinese."

8) If you were visiting a Chinese friend and had a desire to listen to cello music played by an American of Asian descent, you could ask, "Nee yo Yo Yo Ma ma?"

That's all for now. If I think of anything else, I'll let you know.

PBA's reasons for Springsteen concert boycott weak

Patrick J. Lynch, president New York City Police Benevolent Association, is calling for members to boycott Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band's upcoming 10-night run at Madison Square Garden, which runs through July 1.

Flashback to February 1999: Four NYPD officers fired 41 shots at Amadou Diallo, an unarmed African immigrant, who was standing in the vestibule of his apartment. The officers claimed they thought Diallo was an armed rapist who was drawing a gun. The gun was a wallet, and 19 of the officers' bullets struck 22-year-old Diallo, killing him.

Last February, all four officers were acquitted of all second-degree murder, which caused many, including Springsteen, to wonder, what kind of justice had been served. Springsteen wrote a song called "American Skin (41 Shots)," which he has begun recently to perform at his concerts.

VIEWPOINT
BRANDI HERTIG

Lynch responded to the song's lyrics with a letter, posted on its Web site, www.nycpba.org, to all PBA delegates and members. In it, Lynch said, "I consider it an outrage that (Springsteen) would be trying to fatten his wallet by reopening the wounds of this tragic case at a time when police officers and community members are in a healing period. ..."

Last I heard, Springsteen wasn't exactly hurting financially.

If Springsteen is trying to fatten anything, it's social consciousness. But despite the fact that such an attempt would be seen by most as some sort of social altruism, police officers and their allied tradespeople have not squirmed so much over a song since Ice T's "Cop Killer." Opponents of Springsteen's song claim their displeasure stems from the song's not mentioning that the four officers were acquitted of all charges. This leaves the rest of us to assume that anything said in opposition to fact should not allowed to be expressed.

So much for the First Amendment.

Whatever the reason for demanding a boycott of Springsteen concerts, the PBA's argument is inherently weak, obvious by its allusion to pure monetary gain as Springsteen's motivation for writing "American Skin." Suppose Springsteen donated all proceeds from the song to the Diallo family. Where then is the argument for boycott? Can the PBA honestly ask for a boycott of someone's expression of frustration against the justice system and the NYPD if that person's words do not contain threats against said bodies?

The PBA cannot honestly expect the public to be pleased with the acquittal of four white policemen who murdered an unarmed black man. The PBA cannot honestly expect the nation to sit complacent just because its brand of justice made it OK for white police officers to murder unarmed immigrants.

It is a fact that the four police officers were acquitted of murder. It is also a fact that an innocent man died at the hands of those who were supposed to serve and protect him. So, Patrick J. Lynch, you tell me who truly should be outraged here.

Supreme Court rules state schools cannot allow publicly lead prayer

■ Ruling results from suit by 2 Texan families about prayer at football games.

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Supreme Court ruled Monday that public school districts cannot allow student-lead, student-initiated prayers to crowds before high school football games.

The 6-3 decision said such prayers violate the constitutionally required separation of government and church.

The ruling came after two Texas families, one Catholic and one Mormon, filed a lawsuit in 1995 against the Santa Fe Independent School District for allowing students to lead prayers over the public announcement system preceding football games. At the time, students elected a chaplain to lead the prayer. After the lawsuit was filed, the school changed its policy so that students elected a representative — not a chaplain — to give a message or invocation of their choice as long as it promoted good sportsmanship. Most of the time, however, it included prayer.

Those in favor felt that prayer was part of their First Amendment right to speech, while those opposed felt it violated the separation of state and religion, forcing religion upon themselves and their families.

The Supreme Court ruled praying over a public announcement system encourages public prayer and is not properly characterized as private speech.

"School sponsorship of a religious message is impermissible because it sends the ancillary message to members of the audience who are nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community," Justice John Paul Stevens wrote for the court.

"The delivery of such a message — over the school's public address system by a speaker representing the student body, under the supervision of school faculty and pursuant to a school policy that explicitly and implicitly encourages public prayer — is not properly characterized as private speech," he said.

■ RELATED PERSPECTIVE
Read why the Collegian Editorial Board applauds the Supreme Court decision on page 3.

The decision is one of the most important of its kind since 1992, when the court prohibited clergy-lead prayers at public school graduation ceremonies.

It reaffirms the court's ruling in 1962, which outlawed organized, officially sponsored prayer in public schools.

Joining Stevens in the verdict were Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy, David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas opposed the decision.

Rod Cole, Fellowship of Christian Athletes adviser at K-State, said he feels students have the right to pray.

"Any student ought to be able to pray," he said. "The further our schools defray prayer away from students, we're going in the wrong direction."

He said he felt the case belonged in the category of freedom of speech, and that the debate of freedom of speech vs. separation of church and state will be neverending.

"I'm sure this issue will continue to be thrown around in the courts for quite some time," Cole said.

John Fliter, K-State assistant professor of political science, said he agrees with the Supreme Court decision.

"I think it's a good decision. We have to be careful about schools supporting prayer, especially those consisting of religious beliefs," Fliter said. "If schools are going to open up a forum, it has to include those of all faiths, not just one particular one."

He said the court's decision did not surprise him because it is consistent with how it has ruled in previous cases.

"Again, the court is saying government in the public schools should be careful about endorsing religious practices," Fliter said. "This decision does not prevent students from praying in school. The point is, school officials should not be endorsing it."

Waiting list for new PT Cruiser

Distinctive vehicle creating commotion in Manhattan

By JIM REINTJES
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leeanne Wells didn't get much choice in the car her parents bought her.

"You drive a PT Cruiser or you're on your own," Wells, 1999 K-State graduate in bakery science management, said her parents told her.

Wells said if she didn't get a Chrysler PT Cruiser, her parents would have given her down-payment money for a different vehicle and she would have had to pay for the rest.

Wells' parents purchased one PT and have sold it already. They have a third one on order.

"My mom might drive it," Wells said. "This one we just had to have. It's my little hearse."

Wells drove her PT, which was Goetsch-Irvine Chrysler Plymouth's first PT, out of the dealership's showroom Thursday.

"It was sold two months before it got here," said Jan Verbrugge, owner of Goetsch-Irvine in Manhattan.

Verbrugge said they have 22 PTs on order.

"That's a lot, considering half those people bought the car sight unseen," Verbrugge said.

He said Chrysler has a lot of information on the Internet on the PT.

"It's not like they came in and didn't know anything about it," he said.

He said he has received a lot of inquiries about the PT.

"We have got 10 inquiries a day on the PT in the last four or five months," he said.

He said showroom traffic has significantly increased since it got its first PT.

"We average 15 to 20 people a day who come in just to look at the car," he said.

Verbrugge has worked at Goetsch for 27 years and said the PT has attracted more attention than the Prowler.

Chrysler has received more than 300,000 requests for information on the PT.

"I am amazed at the interest this car has brought in," he said. "It must be the retro look. PT stands for 'personal transportation.'"

He said that it will sell a lot of PTs.

"People will have to wait their turn or pay $5,000 more for it. Two years from now, these things will be all over the place."

— Jan Verbrugge, owner of Goetsch-Irvine Chrysler Plymouth

New Beetle when it came out in 1998.

"I just bought the PT to get people on the lot," Lee said. "It's the best advertisement you can get."

Lee said there have been some near accidents in front of his dealership because of people looking at the PT.

"People have locked up their tires out here," Lee said.

Lee said when he came in on a Monday morning, he couldn't see through the windows because so many people had looked at the car over the weekend.

"It was covered with fingerprints," Lee said. "I had to have them wash it."

Darrel Roeder, sales manager at Briggs Auto Group in Manhattan, said it's been a while since a regular production domestic vehicle has garnered so much interest.

It was rumored that a Briggs salesperson had sold a PT Cruiser from Canada to country singer Mel Tillis.

"We are dealing with a celebrity on one, but that deal hasn't matured yet," Roeder said.

Verbrugge is selling PTs at sticker price, which ranges from $16,000 to $21,000. He said a PT would only sit in the showroom a day or two unsold.

"People will have to wait their turn or pay $5,000 more for it," he said. "Two years from now, these things will be all over the place."

Juneteenth celebrates black heritage

Manhattan residents remember historical freeing of slaves through food, music, displays, parade

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Donnie Slater got new glasses. His optometrist will be getting a Christmas card in June, Slater said, because he said he sees nothing but beauty and truth.

What Slater was looking at was the gathering of people for the Juneteenth celebration Saturday morning on 17th and Yuma streets.

This is typically a celebration to remember the freeing of Texas slaves on June 19, 1865 — six months after the Emancipation Proclamation was issued, said Slater, Manhattan resident and member of the Juneteenth committee.

But the event was not reserved solely for black people.

"We, more or less, had the idea that Juneteenth was for blacks, but it's not just for blacks," Lucille Baker, Manhattan resident, said. "We've come together. We don't have that bad feeling anymore."

Baker was honored as the grand marshal of the Juneteenth parade because her family was among the first black families to arrive in Manhattan and stay.

Jesse Baker, her father, arrived in 1919 to a small black community that had immigrated to Kansas in 1879.

They had come to Kansas because of the association with abolitionist John Brown, wrote James Butler, a K-State graduate, in his essay about black history in Manhattan.

Handbills describing opportunities in Kansas were distributed in the south by black porters and steamboat hands, but only 163 out of the nearly 400 who arrived decided to stay in Manhattan.

According to Butler, they were housed in an old paper mill at the east end of Leavenworth Street.

The townspeople were helpful, teaching them how to read and write, but ultimately decided they would be better off in a settlement of their own.

The Freed Man's Aid Association bought them 1,280 acres, which they called Wabaunsee County, and divided it among 31 families.

They periodically celebrated Juneteenth in Manhattan's City Park, which was the only time they were allowed in town.

The pool was open to them, but it always was drained so the water would come up to their ankles.

However, a regular Juneteenth celebration began in Manhattan in 1989 in Manhattan resident Diana Caldwell's backyard.

"We need a constant reminder," Caldwell said. "This is just one of those opportunities to reflect."

Cynthia Mitchell, former Manhattan resident, helped start the Manhattan tradition.

She said it's a way to express freedom and to teach people about unity, sharing and learning about each other's culture.

"We need to know a little about that, because it's been buried for so long," Mitchell said. "It's not so much for blacks. It's for everybody."

The event started with a parade down Yuma Street that ended at the Douglass Community Center.

"Getting together, eating together, just the experience of being out and communicating with one another — hopefully that'll extend throughout the year," said Kay Glen, Manhattan resident and a Juneteenth committee member.

"To break down those barriers of color and difference — the best way to do that is to share those experiences," she said.

"We need to get away from that sense of separation," Glen said. "That's what brought about slavery in the first place."

Inside the Douglass Center was a display of Manhattan's black history. Countless pictures and stories explained in detail what families arrived and what they did once they stayed.

Gerry Walton, Manhattan resident, was on the display committee.

"What I try to do is bring people to focus in Manhattan to let people know that we do remember them," Walton said. "I think that's what history is all about."

The display also was set in a historical building — the Douglass Center used to be a school for black children only.

Rosa Hickman, Manhattan resident, went to school there with Baker, and said she recalls there being only two classrooms.

Both said they were excited that all denominations were present at the event.

"Everybody's like one big family," Hickman said. "One learns that God loves everybody regardless of color. It's manifested here today."

Baker said she's read about how Juneteenth got started, but that it's hard to understand what the slaves went through.

"Not having been freed as a slave, you don't know what it's all about," she said. "We're very blessed to, you know, be living in this day and time."

Wallace Kidd, long-time businessman and former Riley County Commissioner, was honored at the ceremony. He said Juneteenth was an important time for blacks.

"Having been released six months and didn't know it, and no one told us, and to walk out the next day and you're free, what do you do?" he said.

"Start scratching around, seeing where you're going to go and what is your name."

Many former slaves had to give themselves last names because, as slaves, they were given only first names.

The date is and should be a celebration, Kidd said.

"It's another year added to the pain and the suffering of those persons of yesteryear," he said.

There are others, such as Manhattan resident Suzanne Mayo, who has celebrated the date for a long time.

Mayo used to celebrate it in Texas, and continues her celebration in Manhattan because it speaks of family values and gives support to the church and community.

"For me, it's giving back to your roots and learning exactly what is important in the family values of the African-American community and our freedom," she said. Glen said the event was also an example for children.

"Hate is a learned behavior," Glen said. "It's not something we're born with. This is one way to attack racism. We're all born human beings, and that's how we should act toward each other."

Former county commissioner honored last week

Wallace R. Kidd, long-time businessman and former Riley County Commissioner, was honored last week at a variety of activities, including the Juneteenth Community Celebration for the establishment of an annual $1,000 scholarships in the Kidd family's name.

The scholarship will go to multicultural students enrolled in K-State's College of Agriculture.

Kidd served as Riley County Commissioner from 1974 to 1980 and was the first black person to hold that office.

K-State plays large role in technology showcase

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's cutting-edge technology will be on display at the second annual Technology Showcase from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. today and Wednesday at the Topeka ExpoCentre.

Mel Chastain, director of the Regents Educational Communications Center, said the showcase's purpose is to stimulate cooperation among higher education, state government and the private sector.

"This takes ideas developed in research labs in universities and transfers them to other sectors," he said.

K-State will present a total of 10 exhibits, playing one of the largest roles in the showcase, Chastain said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine will be displaying its use of stereoscopic videography to capture scenes from surgery, animal examinations and other situations that would be difficult to bring into the classroom or laboratory.

Also on display will be K-State's solar car, Apollo, designed and built by more than 30

K-State engineering and business students.

Professors and technical staff will present other exhibits including Internet 2, K-State online and distance learning, and K-State-Salina's mini Baja car, Beth Unger, vice provost, said.

Other schools presenting research and technology include the University of Kansas, Emporia State University and Fort Hays State University.

"There were more people wanting to exhibit than there was floor space. People had to be turned away."

— Beth Unger,
vice provost

There are 22 university presentations and several business presentations from the private sector, Unger said.

The showcase, which is in its second year, is Kansas' largest information technology event and conference.

Its popularity has grown substantially in the past year, Unger said.

"There were more people wanting to exhibit than there was floor space," she said.

"People had to be turned away."

Last year, K-State was awarded Best of Show by American Show Management, the event's organizers. This year's efforts top last year's, Unger said.

Gov. Bill Graves will kick off the event with opening remarks at 10 a.m. today.

Admission to the event is free, but guests must register.

Online registration is recommended to avoid lines at the ExpoCentre.

To register, go to www.showcase.asmcorp.com/go/ksts1.

Abilene woman dies after car hits train stopped on tracks

SOLOMON, Kan. — An Abilene woman died when her car struck a stopped train at a Saline County crossing, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Pearl D. Smith, 18, was driving shortly after midnight Monday on the former U.S. 40 when her car struck the ninth car of a train stopped on the tracks, the patrol said.

States, cities forced to return millions in federal relief aid

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Years after coming to the rescue of victims from California earthquakes to Pennsylvania blizzards, the government demanded nearly a half-billion dollars back from states and local communities, federal records show.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency insisted on the refunds after auditors found the aid wasn't deserved. In some cases, the work was not completed as promised or the recipients got paid twice — by the government and insurers.

No indictments in Baltimore police shooting of black man

BALTIMORE — A grand jury decided Tuesday not to indict two white police officers in the death of a black man whose shooting heightened racial tensions in Baltimore.

Police said Officer Barry Wayne Hamilton shot Larry Hubbard, a suspected car thief, point-blank in the back of the head on Oct. 7 after he grabbed for Officer Robert Quick's gun.

Witnesses at the time said Hubbard, 21, was beaten by the two officers and was on his knees, begging for his life, when he was killed.

25-year desegregation order in Louisville ended by judge

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A federal judge lifted a 25-year-old desegregation order for Louisville schools Tuesday, saying the vestiges of the racially separate system are all but gone.

U.S. District Judge John G. Heyburn II sided with a group of black parents who sued in hopes of getting their children into Central High School, which once was Louisville's only public high school for black students.

Fan celebration of Lakers' win of championship turns violent

LOS ANGELES — A celebration of the Los Angeles Lakers' first championship in 12 years deteriorated into mayhem as hundreds of fans torched two police cars, vandalized businesses and set dozens of small bonfires in streets.

Federal stock fraud case leads to arrest of Steven Madden

NEW YORK — Designer Steven Madden was arrested Tuesday on federal charges of conspiring to manipulate the value of his company's stock during its initial public offering.

Steven Madden Ltd., which is known for its clothing and its clunky, high-heeled shoes, operates about 60 stores and sells its products in more than 3,000 other stores. Sales doubled in 1999 to $163 million.

Madden, 43, was held Tuesday on $750,000 bail.

Military official says bin Laden buys arms for Muslim rebels

MANILA, Philippines — Muslim guerrillas recently received $3 million from suspected international terrorist Osama bin Laden to buy new weapons, a top military official said Tuesday.

Armed forces vice chief of staff Lt. Gen. Jose Calimlim said bin Laden sent the money through a rebel emissary who received the funds in a Middle Eastern country last month.

THE ADVENTURE OF A
LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years
to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective — but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation — as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try — you won't regret it.

Women's basketball recruit makes 1st round cuts for Junior World Championships qualifying team

By PETER ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State's women's basketball recruit has made the first round of cuts for the U.S. Women's Junior World Championships qualifying team.

Laurie Koehn was one of 15 players to make the first-round cuts for the team. The team will be cut to 12 shortly after it begins training for the games July 14 in Colorado Springs.

The qualifying tournament will take place in Mar del Plata, Argentina, July 26-30. The top-three finishers from the eight-team tournament will qualify for the 2001 FIBA Women's Junior World Championship in the Czech Republic, July 14-22.

If Koehn makes the cut, the U.S. team will feature two K-State ties. Head coach Deb Patterson has been selected as an assistant coach for the team. University of Connecticut head coach Geno Auriemma will be the head coach of the national squad.

Patterson said Koehn brings a lot of assets to the junior national team.

"She has the ability to shoot the basketball, which traditionally, we don't shoot it as well as other international teams," Patterson said. "She is also a tremendous athlete."

Beyond being a great shooter or athlete, Patterson said Koehn will bring a lot of passion to the team.

"She has a great passion for the game and a passion for winning," Patterson said.

Overall, Patterson said she was thrilled for Koehn.

"This potentially is a tremendous opportunity for her in basketball and in life," Patterson said. "Being chosen to represent your country is a tremendous honor."

"She has the ability to shoot the basketball, which traditionally, we don't shoot it as well as other international teams."

Runner named Academic All-American

Amanda Crouse, junior track and field runner, has been selected to the third team of the 2000 GTE Academic All-American spring women's at-large team. The at-large division comprises athletes from track and field, tennis, golf, lacrosse and rowing. Fifteen student athletes were selected to the first, second and third teams. To be nominated, athletes must have a minimum 3.2 cumulative grade point average and have been made a first team GTE All-District selection.

Crouse has a 3.93 cumulative GPA in pre-veterinary medicine. She was named to the All-Big 12 Academic teams in track and field and cross-country. She also is a member of the Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll.

This past season, Crouse helped lead the track team to a third-place finish in the Big 12 Indoor and Outdoor Track and Field championships. She was a member of the Big 12 indoor champion distance medley relay team and was named NCAA All-American when the team finished third at the March NCAA National Championships. Individually, Crouse finished sixth in the 3000 meters at the Big 12 outdoor meet with a season-best and NCAA provisional qualifying time of 9:35.31.

In cross country, Crouse helped the Wildcats obtain a fifth-place finish in the NCAA Championships, setting a school record. As a runner, she was named All-Midwest Region and All-Big 12.

Six women from the Big 12 Conference were named to the Academic All-American teams.

Football home opener to air on Fox Sports

The K-State football home opener against Louisiana Tech on Sept. 2 will be shown on Fox Sports Network. Kickoff for the game will be 6 p.m.

The K-State vs. Louisiana Tech game will be the middle game of the Fox Sports triple-header. Mississippi State will play at Memphis in the first game. Kickoff for that game is 2:30 p.m. In the night's final game, Washington State will be host to Stanford at 9:15 p.m.

K-State's season opener against Iowa in the Eddie Robinson Football Classic on Aug. 26 also will be shown on Fox Sports Network. The game will start at 1 p.m. at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo.

Other Wildcat games might be televised and will be announced during the season.

"Both Fox and ABC give about six or 12 days notice," Doug Dull, K-State sports information director, said. "They will announce others as the season goes."

Women's basketball sets attendance record

Big 12 women's basketball set an all-time national high in attendance during the 1999-2000 season. During the past season, the conference drew 802,419 fans, an average of 4,720 per game in 170 games, including the conference tournament.

Both sets of figures are all-time national highs among the 31 conferences and independents.

K-State ranked 20th nationally and fifth in the Big 12 with an average attendance of 3,774 in 13 games.

Women's head basketball coach Deb Patterson said being ranked in the top 20 in attendance means a lot on the national scene.

"It helps draw national attention to our program,"

Patterson said. "Especially to recruits and their parents. It is also a sign that we are well supported by the campus and the community."

Patterson said increasing attendance is a must for the Wildcats to rise on the national scene as a team.

"We have to continually improve and build on our attendance," Patterson said. "We need the support, energy and emotion provided by the crowd."

Texas Tech led the conference and was second nationally with an average attendance of 12,741. Other Big 12 teams ranking in the top 20 in the nation were Iowa State, fourth; Texas, 10th; and Nebraska, 14th. All twelve teams in the Big 12 ranked in the top 63 in the nation.

Overall, attendance in the Big 12 increased an average of 983 fans per game over last season.

Texas Tech and Iowa State were two of just four teams nationally to average more than 10,000 fans per game. Tennessee led the nation drawing 15,341 per contest, while the national champion, Connecticut, ranked third with 11,632 fans per contest.

K-State showcases technology at fair

By SARAH BAHARI

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The past two years have been a work in progress for Chris Farmer.

Farmer, member of K-State's solar car racing team, began working on the solar car when it was first being designed.

This solar car, K-State's second, has placed in both races in which it competed.

Farmer said he couldn't have fathomed that the program would achieve success so soon.

"You go through phases," said Farmer, junior in computer engineering and math. "When you first start, you look at what's possible and believe that's what you're going to do. Then reality sets in, and you think you can't do it."

"Then you come into an understanding between the two, and you say this is what's possible and this is what's realistic. You get a balance."

The car placed ninth in an international race last year that traveled from Washington, D.C., to Orlando, Fla. Over the summer, the team placed second at a national race at Heartland Park in Topeka.

The solar car racing team hopes to compete next year with a new car being designed at the World Solar Challenge in Australia.

Farmer said whether the team makes the trip depends on if it is able to find the necessary financial support.

"We have every confidence in the competitiveness in our car and system," he said. "This decision depends on finances — finding the appropriate sponsorships."

Making K-State's solar car program more visible was one of the reasons that Farmer and Norm Dillman, faculty adviser for the team, traveled to the second Kansas Technology Showcase in Topeka on Tuesday and today.

"By being somewhere people can see the car, it helps people be aware of our program and more willing to participate," Farmer said.

The technology showcase, which is Kansas' largest information technology event, works to create cooperation among universities, the private business sector and state government, said Mel Chastain, director of the Regents Educational Communications Center.

"It provides the opportunity for the private sector to see what we're doing and for us to see where they're going, and the state government supports it," he said. "Then businesses can scale things up invented in the research lab."

That was the idea for K-State's 3-D veterinary surgery, said Bert Biles, special projects officer for the Center.

"Our hope was this would introduce people to this technology," he said.

Biles, along with John Pickrell, associate professor of diagnostic medicine pathobiology, came up with the idea of using stereoscopic videography to enhance teaching and learning methods. It captures scenes from surgery, animal examinations and other situations that would be difficult to bring into the classroom or laboratory.

"This allows students to literally look over the shoulder of the veterinarian and see the work more clearly and how they work as a team," Biles said. "And because it's on videotape, students can see it semester after semester."

The group submitted a funding proposal to the Fund for Improvement of Post Secondary Education and will find out if the project will receive funding by the end of the summer, Biles said.

This type of 3-D learning can be extended to the field of architecture, Biles said.

"With computer-generated 3-D images of drawings of buildings, you can fly through a building that hasn't been built yet," he said.

Biles said to his knowledge, this type of technology has not been used yet.

This is just one way that K-State leads the state in technology, Chastain said. Of the 14 university booths, 10 belonged to K-State.

"I'm really proud of K-State," he said. "The quality of higher education in Kansas is high. But K-State leads the higher education institutions."

Student found dead in home in suspected suicide Monday

By ANGELA KISTNER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student was found dead of an apparent suicide Monday night in her apartment.

Sgt. Larry Freeby, Riley County Police Department, said officers received a call about Michelle E. Taylor, senior in psychology, from a concerned individual Monday evening.

Freeby said officers had to force their entry upon arrival at Taylor's apartment. Freeby said

Taylor's apparent cause of death was hanging.

Gas price hikes get government notice

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — With gasoline prices soaring, there's been no shortage of blame — rising oil prices, pipeline problems, short supplies, cleaner gasoline requirements and even an esoteric patent dispute, to name a few.

But an examination of these explanations provides no clear picture of why gasoline, in a matter of a few weeks, jumped as much as 50 cents a gallon in some areas of the Midwest — nearly five times as much as increases nationwide.

The summer price surge has politicians worried in this election year. The Clinton administration has asked the Federal Trade Commission to investigate possible illegal price gouging in the Midwest, and Vice President Al Gore said Monday that a broader probe was needed since oil companies have been making huge profits this year.

White House press secretary Joe Lockhart said Tuesday, despite ongoing investigations, they can't find a legitimate reason for the $2-plus price for gasoline in the Chicago-Milwaukee area and a scattering of other places in the Midwest. He said industry's claim that cleaner-burning gasoline is to blame doesn't stand the test of logic.

Energy Secretary Bill Richardson said the price differential between conventional gasoline and the cleaner fuel required beginning this month in areas with the worst summer smog has not been explained sufficiently by the industry.

"The oil companies, the refining companies need to explain ... why prices are so high," Richardson said after addressing a meeting of oil executives, where he expressed renewed concern about tight gasoline supplies.

George W. Bush's GOP presidential campaign, meanwhile, blamed Gore and President Clinton.

"It sounds like Al Gore is now trying to divert attention away from the Clinton-Gore administration's failed leadership when it comes to addressing high gas prices and developing a national energy policy," Bush campaign spokesman Scott McClellan said.

This is another installment in the Collegian's ongoing coverage of the sudden rise in gasoline prices. Earlier stories are available in our online archives at collegian.ksu.edu.

Lawmakers seek harder look at local gas prices

By LIBBY QUAID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Kansas and Missouri lawmakers want a federal probe into soaring Midwestern gas prices to focus on Missouri and Kansas City in particular.

Democratic Reps. Dennis Moore of Kansas and Ike Skelton of Missouri were among several members of Congress who asked Monday that their home turf be added to an investigation into why drivers are paying more than $2 a gallon in Chicago and other Midwestern cities.

On Friday, U.S. House Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde said the Federal Trade Commission will launch a full-scale review into price-fixing in the oil industry.

Moore said the Environmental Protection Agency, Department of Energy and Department of Transportation are also investigating and asked the agency chiefs to include Kansas City.

Moore, who as a local prosecutor won such a case against a large oil company, said that percentage-wise, Kansas City drivers are hurting as much as Chicago drivers.

Citing American Automobile Association figures, Moore said average retail prices in the Kansas City metro area have grown from $1.02 per gallon last year to $1.73 now, or 69 percent.

"When market forces indicate that prices should be stable but the opposite is occurring, this issue is definitely worth a hard look," he said.

Meanwhile, Skelton went right to the top, asking President Clinton for an investigation.

"I am highly suspicious that Missouri's consumers are being subjected to artificially inflated gasoline prices as a result of possible unlawful practices by major oil companies," Skelton said. "Gasoline price increases in Missouri and across the country erode consumer confidence and threaten to harm our nation's thriving economy."

Rep. Luis Gutierrez, D-Ill., said he would ask Attorney General Janet Reno to look for any signs of price fixing in the oil industry.

Gutierrez was part of a Democratic congressional panel that had a hearing Monday in Chicago during which lawmakers and ethanol executives butted heads with the oil industry.

K-State professor aids in search to identify barrel body victims

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISONVILLE, Mo. — Investigators trying to identify two women whose bodies were found stuffed into barrels in a storage locker are turning to the K-State forensic anthropologist who confirmed the identity of long-dead outlaw Jesse James.

Authorities thought a week ago they had identified the bodies — two of five found in Missouri and eastern Kansas — as those of a woman and her daughter, both linked to suspect John E. Robinson Sr.

Robinson has been charged in the slayings of five women and is suspected in the killings of five others and one of the missing women's baby. Three of the bodies were found earlier this month at a storage facility he rented in Raymore, Mo., and two others were found on land Robinson owns near La Cygne, Kan.

Three of the bodies have been identified. But the other two women, identified in court documents as Jane Doe No. 1 and Jane Doe No. 2, are not Sheila Dale Faith, and her daughter, Debbie Lynn Faith as first thought. Dental records and X-rays from the bodies didn't match up.

Investigators have asked Michael Finnegan, professor of anthropology, for help.

Cass County Prosecutor Chris Koster said Monday that he hopes that Finnegan, an expert in forensic anthropology, can identify the women.

"We're just trying to get basic information, such as the age of women and the time period in which they have been dead," Koster said.

Using skeletal remains, Finnegan said, he can determine a person's age, sex, stature and race or ancestry. Police then can compare that information to profiles of missing people.

Koster and Finnegan will discuss later this week whether the tests should be conducted in the Kansas City area or whether the remains should be taken to Finnegan's lab in Manhattan.

The task force investigating the case was reduced by about half Monday.

Sixteen investigators from several departments remain on the Lenexa, Kan.-based task force, Lenexa Sgt. Rick Roth said.

Detectives are trying to narrow down the times when several women connected to Robinson were last seen.

The task force has received numerous calls from people who knew Robinson or his alleged victims, Roth said. But the number of phone calls has declined since police first made their three-month investigation public early this month.

Investigators have talked to people on the phone from other states about missing persons, but have not gone to meet with them, Roth said.

Finnegan has been called on before by authorities and military personnel worldwide. Among his more notable cases is verifying the identity of James.

Some relatives of a J. Frank Dalton believe the outlaw faked his death in Missouri, assumed the name Dalton and moved to Texas, where he died in 1951 at age 104.

Those relatives recently secured a court order to exhume the body in Texas for testing.

DNA tests done in 1995 indicate that the real Jesse James is buried at the James farm in Kearney, Mo.

Although investigators already know that the two unidentified women found stuffed in barrels died of blows to the head, they don't know how long they have been dead.

But by studying any trauma inflicted on the bodies before, during or after death, Finnegan might be able to answer some of those questions.

Koster said that even if the two women are never identified, he is prepared to continue with his case against Robinson.

"It's possible they may go as Jane Doe indefinitely," he said.

Senate passes hate-crimes bill

By TOM RAUM

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — After a furious last-minute lobbying blitz by the Clinton administration, the Senate voted 57 to 42 on Tuesday to approve legislation that would make it easier for federal prosecutors to try hate crimes.

Vice President Al Gore interrupted presidential campaigning in Kentucky to fly to Washington to cast a deciding vote should there be a tie in the Republican-controlled chamber.

Despite the victory for the administration, the bill faced an uncertain future.

The vote attached it as an amendment to a massive defense bill on which more than 100 other amendments were pending.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., indicated he planned to put the legislation aside later in the day and to turn to something else.

Furthermore, the House in the past has rejected such an approach on hate crimes.

Still, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., the principal sponsor, called on colleagues to take a clear and unequivocal stand for the measure.

The legislation would add offenses motivated by sexual orientation, sex or disability to the list of hate crimes already covered under a 1968 federal law.

It also would give federal prosecutors the option of pursuing a hate-crime case if local authorities refused to press charges.

Supporters cited the 1998 death in Jasper, Texas, of James Byrd, a 49-year-old black man, who was dragged behind a pickup truck; and the death, also in 1998, of Matthew Shepard, a 21-year-old homosexual University of Wyoming student, who died after being beaten into a coma and tied to a fence.

Neither state had a hate-crimes statute.

But critics, including Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, suggested that the bill would infringe on state and local authorities' law enforcement authority.

Man accused of girl's death faces allegations of assault

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The man accused in the kidnapping, sexual assault and death of a 10-year-old Kansas City, Kan., girl now is accused of assaulting a guard and attempting to escape from a private jail.

Federal prosecutors made the accusations in an amended notice to seek the death penalty against Keith D. Nelson, being held without bond at the Leavenworth, Kan., jail.

Mars Global Surveyor finds tentative evidence of water

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Mars Global Surveyor has radioed data to Earth suggesting there is surface water on the red planet, which could boost the possibility of finding evidence of life, experts said.

Sources, speaking on the condition of anonymity, confirmed Wednesday that the Global Surveyor has detected evidence of the effects of surface water. Further details were withheld pending publication next week of a study in the journal Science, the source said. These sketchy details were confirmed by a second source, also claiming anonymity.

FBI finds no spying evidence in Los Alamos investigation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The FBI has found no evidence of espionage or indications that missing computer disks containing nuclear secrets ever left the Los Alamos weapons lab, Energy Secretary Bill Richardson said Wednesday.

A grand jury has been convened to consider the case, he told a Senate hearing. Investigators also have lifted fingerprints from wrappings of the hard drives, which apparently disappeared in late March and reappeared last week behind a copying machine at the New Mexico facility.

100,000 missing homes left; sampling survey will begin

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Two weeks before a self-imposed deadline, the Census Bureau has reached more than 99 percent of the 42 million households that failed to return a questionnaire, census director Kenneth Prewitt said Wednesday.

Census-takers have 100,000 of the 42 million homes left to track down, said Prewitt, who had hoped to have the current operation complete around July 7.

"This is a good census," Prewitt said at a news conference at the National Press Club. "Every major operation has performed better than expected. We've continually been on or ahead of schedule."

Blood from umbilical cords as effective as bone marrow

Transplants of umbilical cord blood are as effective as bone marrow transplants at saving the lives of childhood leukemia victims and others whose ravaged immune systems must be restored, a study reported in today's New England

Journal of Medicine found.

That's an encouraging finding, because most patients awaiting a bone marrow transplant die before genetically matched marrow can be found.

Muslims cheer as Islamic law proclaimed in Nigerian state

ABUJA, Nigeria — Muslims in Nigeria's north cheered the formal declaration of Islamic law Wednesday, despite an upsurge in religious violence that has already killed thousands of people and forced many of the region's minority Christians to flee.

The proclamation made by Kano state Governor Rabi'u Kwankwaso was met with deafening chants of "Allah Akbar," or "God is great," from the crowd gathered in the state capital's main prayer grounds to celebrate the announcement, according to residents and local journalists contacted by telephone.

Area band to play at Stampede

Heartland lead singer's parents proud of son's accomplishments

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While this weekend's Country Stampede will be highlighted by acts such as Brooks & Dunn, Lonestar and Kenny Chesney, a relatively unknown band, Heartland, also will play.

Heartland, a western Kansas group, will take the stage at 11:30 a.m. Saturday, just before Travis Tritt. Some fans said they could not be more excited about the band's performance.

"This is kind of like having a son play in a professional football game," said Kent Rittenhouse, father of Tim Rittenhouse, Heartland's lead singer. "When you're on the same stage with people like Dwight Yoakam, you're of course proud."

While the band was scheduled to appear last year, weather prevented its performance. The Rittenhouses expect a lot of family, including their two dogs, Abraham and Sarah, to attend this year's appearance.

"Last year there were eight of us," Marlana Rittenhouse, Tim's mother, said. "This year there will be eight or 10 of us. There'll be wall-to-wall kids in there, all over the floor. They wouldn't miss this."

Heartland has been together for about eight years, and while it might not be familiar with Manhattan residents, it is popular in western Kansas.

"The boys, out in western Kansas, they've got a pretty good following of people," Kent said. "They've been on the Hays radio stations a lot. They travel all over the state. Last year they even did a couple of shows in Wisconsin."

The Rittenhouses say they are thankful for Tim's gift, but they did admit it was a little bit unexpected.

"It's just a gift," Kent said. "A God-given gift. We're real proud of him. His voice, of course, I'm his dad, but I think he's got as good a voice as you'll hear."

Tim's family wasn't always aware of his talent.

"We didn't know he could sing," Marlana said. "We were amazed he could sing. He's never had a music lesson in his life."

Kent said his son did not get started in music until his senior year of high school. Then Tim decided to enter a state music contest and won first place, Kent said.

Marlana recalls the time when Tim sang at her daughter's funeral.

"He sang 'The River.' A secretary at the church said, 'I just love it when Garth Brooks sings that song.'"

Kent told the secretary that it was Tim, and she didn't believe it, Marlana said.

Kent said his son told him he could sing more than 200 country songs from memory.

Sandwiched between his performances on the weekends, Tim works as an electrician for his dad during the week. Kent said Tim enjoys the work, especially compared to school.

"You couldn't get that kid interested in opening a book to save your neck," Kent said. "Now, he's extremely talented with his hands, and he's smart."

Kent said he also sees the Country Stampede as a place and time where his son could take advantage of his talent.

"You can have all the talent in the world, but if you don't get the exposure, you don't get the breaks," Kent said. "I really think if Tim got the right breaks and got the right people, he could play some big-time music."

No matter what else his son accomplishes in his music career, Kent said he will always be proud of Tim.

"He knows where his priorities are," Kent said. "I guess I'm more proud of that than I am about the fact that he can sing."

Alumna final contestant in karaoke contest at Stampede

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jenni Latzke began her musical career at age 3. Standing on a pew in church, she would look over her father's shoulder at his hymnal, where she would follow his finger along the notes.

Now, 19 years later, she won't be looking over her father's shoulder to sing. She will be looking over a crowd of about 150,000 when she takes the stage at Country Stampede as a final contestant in the Hey Ya'll Karaoke contest.

Latzke, a 2000 K-State graduate in agricultural journalism, said she has always dreamed of becoming a singer.

"I had a choice when I went to college — either sing or write," Latzke said. "I chose to write because I knew that I could pay the bills with it. Singing was too risky of a commitment to me when I started college. But, the dream has always been there."

She decided to postpone her singing career until she graduated from college.

"Even though the odds are against me because I can't play an instrument very well, I don't have a band and I don't write any music, I can't shake the dream of hearing my voice on the radio and having my music touch people's lives enough that they'll want to play it at their weddings and other occasions," Latzke said.

Now, she has a degree and is chasing her dreams. Latzke has won her way to the final round of a karaoke contest, sponsored by WIBW-FM 97.3, that awards the winner of the final contest two VIP tickets to next year's Stampede. As one of six finalists, Latzke received $100 and two three-day passes to this year's Stampede.

Karaoke contests have been at five locations, with the sixth taking place this Friday at Country Stampede. Latzke attended the second contest in Emporia, Kan.

Contestants registered from 6 to 8 p.m., and then 15 people were randomly drawn to compete. Latzke was not one of them.

Determined to have a chance at fame, she attended the fourth contest at Manhattan's RC McGraw's. Twenty-five people were drawn for this contest, and she was chosen. Getting on stage, she performed the song "Cowboy Take Me Away," by the Dixie Chicks, as the lyrics ran across the screen in front of her.

"Karaoke is pretty easy and way fun," Latzke said. "Plus, it's great practice for someone like me who just enjoys singing in front of crowds."

At the end of the night, Latzke was announced as the winner. Now she is on her way to Stampede, where she will perform the song "Take It Back," by Reba McEntire. Each contestant is able to choose a song, and Latzke said she chose this song for two reasons.

"One, because she is my idol, and two, because it's one of those I feel really comfortable singing," she said. "I wanted to do something a little older, but not too old."

She said she is excited to sing in front of her friends and family because they have been supportive. Thinking back four years ago, Latzke remembered the time she attended her first Stampede with a few friends.

"I looked up at the stage and thought, 'That's what I want to be doing. I want to be up there singing,'" she said. "My ultimate goal is to one day be performing at Country Stampede."

Latzke said she is most scared that when she walks on stage and begins to sing, her voice will crack or she won't be prepared. Being in front of 150,000 is the last thing she is nervous about.

"I have no problem getting up in front of people and making a fool out of myself," she said. "I've done that many times. I'm much more comfortable in front of a crowd than one-on-one."

Carla Newman, WIBW-FM promotions director, said the contest was a far bigger event than they ever imagined.

"We've had more entries for this contest than any other talent contest," she said.

The contest will take place Saturday afternoon, with three contestants performing at noon and the other three at 3 p.m. The winner will be announced at 5:30 p.m. and will be presented a trophy and two VIP tickets to Country Stampede 2001.

Latzke said no matter what happens at the contest, she will continue to chase her dream.

"I'm going to try to find a job in the Nashville area, and see if I can get together with a band and start from there," she said. "Entering contests is just a way of staying in the swing of things. I just feel if I don't do anything about it right now, I will never do it and will always wonder what could've happened."

OPEC to raise production by 3 percent

By BRUCE STANLEY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC members agreed Wednesday to boost official crude oil production by 3 percent, Qatar's oil minister said — a move unlikely to be enough to provide motorists with relief from record-high gasoline prices in the United States.

After an unusually brief 90-minute meeting Wednesday in Vienna, Qatari oil minister Abdullah bin Hamad Al Attiyah said the production increase from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will be 708,000 barrels daily. It will begin in July, according to Ali Naimi, oil minister for Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest producer.

But oil prices were rising on world markets, and analysts said they expected the increased production limits would have little substantial effect on gas prices through the summer months.

The index of the main U.S. crude oil supply, West Texas Intermediate, rose 70 cents by Wednesday afternoon on the New York Mercantile Exchange, where contracts for August delivery changed hands for $31.35 a barrel. On Tuesday, when the July contract expired, the price for oil for short-term delivery closed at a 3 1/2-month high of $33.05 a barrel.

On the International Petroleum Exchange in London, the August contract for Brent crude from the North Sea was up 38 cents at $29.40 a barrel Wednesday afternoon.

Analysts said an increase of 700,000 barrels daily would add only an estimated 200,000 fresh barrels of crude to the market. That's because many of OPEC's 11 members are already exceeding their quotas by a total of roughly 500,000 barrels a day.

In addition, oil produced in July will not immediately reach markets in the United States because of the time it takes to ship Middle East oil.

As a result, analysts said a 3-percent increase in OPEC's output might cap current high prices for crude but would do little to ease prices for gasoline in the United States.

Roger Diwan, an analyst at The Petroleum Finance Company, a consultancy based in Washington, said an increase of 700,000 barrels a day could remove some of the sting to oil importing nations, causing U.S. oil prices, for example, to drop slightly to between $27 and $28 per barrel. As a rough rule of thumb, each $1 drop in the price of a 42-gallon barrel of oil is equivalent to a 2 1/2 cent decline in a gallon of gas.

The ministers met at a time when pressure is building in the United States for relief from sharply rising gasoline prices. The national average price of regular unleaded gas was $1.681 this week, up a nickel from the previous week, according to the Department of Energy — a fourth straight week of record highs.

"I think the U.S. gas prices are going to continue to go up this summer," said Falah Aljibury, an industry consultant based in Alamo, Calif.

American refineries already are producing almost all the gasoline they can, and U.S. gas inventories are at their lowest levels in several years, he said. By the time ships containing fresh Middle Eastern crude reach U.S. ports, the summer driving season will be almost over.

Hopes for even greater OPEC production were tempered by the group's limited ability to pump more oil. Only Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates have enough spare capacity to pump large amounts of new oil, said Leo Drollas, chief economist of the Center for Global Energy Studies in London.

OPEC pumps about 35 percent of the world's oil. Its official quota, not including Iraq, is 24.69 million barrels a day.

Key non-OPEC producers such as Mexico have cooperated with the cartel, agreeing in March, for example, to boost their output in line with OPEC.

Under pressure from the United States, nine OPEC members agreed in March to raise output in a successful effort to trim crude prices, which had almost tripled over the previous year.

Iraq participated unofficially in that increase although it refused to sign the formal agreement out of anger at what it saw as heavy-handed U.S. intervention.

Iraq, which never was part of the production cuts last year that sent prices surging, was excluded from the March agreement. And this week, Iraq urged oil producers not to feel pressured to boost production, even as its own output has been on the rise to raise badly needed cash.

"Iraq will not accept any increase in oil production during the OPEC meeting under any pressure," Oil Minister Amer Mohammed Rashid was quoted as saying Wednesday in the Iraqi al-Thawra daily. Rashid sent a subordinate to the OPEC meeting.

Kansas senator requests increased oil production to solve high gas prices

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., called Wednesday morning for an increase in oil production to combat the rising gasoline prices in the Midwest and nationwide.

High gas prices can be traced to a supply-demand problem, Brownback said.

"Gasoline inventories are at a four-year low — 20 percent lower than where they were last year," he said.

Among his suggestions to lower fuel prices, Brownback mentioned a tax incentive for increased domestic production and is looking into increasing production in the 17,000-acre Alaska National Wildlife Preserve.

He also called upon the Clinton administration to repeal the 4.3 cents per gallon federal tax that was installed several years ago to aid in balancing the budget.

Since the budget has been balanced and the national debt could be paid off this year, it's time to do away with that tax, he said.

The Federal Trade Commission recently has announced it will look into possible price gouging by oil companies, focusing on the Chicago and Milwaukee areas.

Brownback said he will continue to urge the FTC to look into price gouging in the Kansas City area and other parts of Kansas.

"These are steps we need to take to get handle on problems with gas prices," he said. "It's shocking all of us what gas prices are doing, particularly in the Midwest."

Funeral for student to occur Saturday

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Funeral services for Michelle E. Taylor will be at 10 a.m. Saturday in Newton, Kan., at St. Mary's church.

Taylor, found dead of apparent suicide in her apartment Monday evening, was a senior in psychology.

Julie DuBois, friend of Taylor's since third grade, said she was surprised by Taylor's death because she hadn't given any signs that anything was wrong.

"I just had seen her last week, and she had mentioned that she had moved into a new apartment by herself," she said.

"She was telling me she was excited to move into a place by herself."

DuBois said Taylor had been shopping for things to fix up her new apartment.

"This was totally out of the blue," she said.

TAYLOR

DuBois said Taylor was a happy person, and she never would have guessed her to do something like this.

"She was awesome," she said. "This was a very hidden thing."

Riley County Police Department is still investigating the case. The Riley County coroner has ordered an autopsy.

If friends want to send flowers or cards to Taylor's family, they can send them to 1104 E. 9th St., Newton, Kan., 67114.

'Good Morning America' to show segment about arts in Manhattan

■ Program comparing summer arts programs airs on ABC this morning.

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

America will wake up to Manhattan this morning.

ABC's "Good Morning America" will air a segment comparing summer art programs in the Big Apple and the Little Apple today as part of its weeklong series on parenting.

On Friday, the show's representatives came to Manhattan to see how the city exposes children to art in the summer.

The show gathered footage of different art programs and activities around town and spent time with Manhattan's Knackendoffel family.

Tish Rogers, executive director of the Manhattan Arts Center, said she hopes the segment will help people realize it's not necessary to live in a big city to access the arts.

"Small communities can do a wonderful job of providing programs for kids and art programs," Rogers said.

When "Good Morning America" told Rogers it wanted to focus on a family with three kids who's also associated with the university, she immediately thought of the Knackendoffels, Rogers said.

Ann Knackendoffel, assistant professor of special education, and her husband, Mark, have two daughters, 3-year-old Francie and 9-year-old Ellen. Their son, Paul, is 7.

The "Good Morning America" crew began its day of filming at Oak Grove School. After it filmed children working with the arts center's mobile studio and truck, the crew headed over to the Knackendoffels' home.

Ann Knackendoffel said her three children quickly realized that being on television isn't all that glamorous — being filmed for about five hours by the crew wore the children out a little.

The Knackendoffels and the crew went to the Manhattan Arts Center together and watched a watercolor show and a Manhattan High School Experimental Theater performance.

"Small communities can do a wonderful job of providing programs for kids and art programs."

— Tish Rogers, executive director
Manhattan Arts Center

The Gold Orchestra, a children's orchestra scheduled to perform at Carnegie Hall, also was filmed.

The crew ended its day at the Arts in the Park concert.

"It was great to be part of it, and this should create good memories for the kids," Knackendoffel said.

"Good Morning America" broadcasts on ABC from 7 to 9 a.m. The parenting segment has been running in the second hour of the show.

Colbert Hills provides summer work, opportunities

By JOSHUA MOSIER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students can be seen at Colbert Hills Golf Course this summer. Instead of playing, though, many have hit the course for summer jobs.

Students can be found working in many areas including outside services, beverage-cart attendance and management.

The course-management positions are ideal for the nearly 130 students studying golf course management. There are 10 students working in this area, five of whom are interns through the school. The internships last either three or six months and are meant to teach them the skills to become golf course superintendents after graduation.

Cody Reed, summer intern and senior in horticulture and golf course management, said he has found the internship to be helpful.

"I've learned about irrigation, seeding, reseeding, fertilizing, and just about anything involving the course's overall maintenance," he said. "I'd say I've learned more working on the course than in any time spent in the classroom."

Jack Fry, professor of horticulture forestry and recreation resources, said the golf course offers many benefits to students.

"Having the course provides so many opportunities to learn," Fry said. "They are using state-of-the-art John Deere equipment and state-of-

Fry, along with other faculty members, will be teaching portions of their classes on-site, which will complement these internships, he said.

Garrett Miller, junior in finance, works in outside services and spends his time coordinating the transportation of carts and working at the driving range.

"I enjoy working there because of the customers," Miller said. "They are there to see a nice course and it's such a big boost to the Manhattan community that they are excited about the experience of being there."

LAKIN, Kan. — A group of western Kansas residents is asking for Washington's help in a grassroots fight against corporate hog farming.

The Kearny County Alliance wants the federal government to make it easier for private citizens to delay — even stop — controversial projects such as large hog farms, sewage treatment plants and packing plants.

The alliance is trying to stop Merriam-based Seaboard Farms from building three large hog farms in Kearny County.

Members have filed a petition with the Environmental Protection Agency, claiming that the state is violating federal water law by making it difficult to challenge controversial projects in court.

Residents want the EPA to take over the Kansas water program, or Kansas to change its law. Residents also have filed official notice that they intend to sue the EPA if it doesn't take over the program.

If the group wins, it could hand Kansas residents a tool to fight other projects, such as a proposed sewage treatment plant in northwest Wichita and a proposed packing plant in Arkansas City.

But others argue that a victory by the Kearny County Alliance could throw projects into limbo.

"The fact of the matter is, this isn't just about the environment," said Don Moler, director of the League of Kansas Municipalities. "It is about money and a lot of it."

The state and federal governments are likely to have differing requirements, Moler said, and meeting those could be costly if the EPA takes over Kansas' water program.

Most cities would rather work with state officials, who are more responsive to their needs than federal officials, he said.

1 dead, 2 arrested in Emporia after fight for control of gun

EMPORIA, Kan. — Two people have been arrested after the weekend shooting death of a man at an apartment.

Michael C. Gilligan was shot as he struggled with another man for control of a gun, police said. The other man was not among those arrested.

Gilligan, 38, was hit once in the chest by a shot fired by a woman who came to the apartment with him, police said. Gilligan died at a hospital.

The 19-year-old woman fled the scene, but was later arrested. A 20-year-old man turned himself in to police in Topeka on Saturday evening and was sent to the Lyon County Jail in Emporia.

High levels of lead-oxide dust found at plant fined by OSHA

OLATHE, Kan. — A car and truck battery plant has been cited for the second time in seven years for exposing workers to hazardous levels of lead oxide dust.

The federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration fined Delphi Automotive Systems $6,075. The citation was made public Monday. Delphi agreed in an informal settlement to correct problems by June 30, but did not admit any wrongdoing. In return for the promise to correct the problems, OSHA lowered the fines from an initial total of $25,650.

Juries, not judges, to decide motive in hate crimes cases

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Juries, not judges, must decide whether someone charged with a hate crime was motivated by bias and therefore can be given a higher maximum sentence, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The 5-4 decision overturns a 12-year prison sentence imposed on a white New Jersey man who fired shots into a black family's home. The man is entitled to a jury trial on whether he acted out of racial bias, the justices said.

OUR VIEW

REASON FOR 4TH OF JULY SHOULD NOT BE FORGOTTEN

Fireworks will fill the sky, charcoal snakes will be on the sidewalks and millions of families will light up the grill to barbecue a week from today.

All these things will happen in the name of the 4th of July.

In this the midst of the celebrations, though, let us not forget what we're actually celebrating — our independence. Remember what the holiday is actually about. Remember that on the 4th of July in 1776, America claimed its Independence from England and democracy was born when the Declaration of Independence was adopted by the Continental Congress, and the 13 colonies proclaimed they would no longer belong to England.

Also, remember that many countries around the world don't have the same freedoms that we do, and every day people come to America so they, too, can enjoy the same independence we do.

So, before the last firework is lit and the final hamburger is eaten, be thankful for our independence and remember to say "happy birthday, America."

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Columnist says goodbye to journalism professor, friend, hopes students at new job will welcome, appreciate him

VIEWPOINT
BRANDI HERTIG

Dear students in the E.W. Scripps School of Journalism at Ohio University:

My friend is leaving.

This is of no consequence to you, except that he is coming your way to be a journalism professor in your state, at your university. You should be ecstatic. We here should be ecstatic for him, for this opportunity for him to return to the place where he got his Ph.D., to be the adviser for the student magazine.

And we are. Mostly.

It's difficult to put into words all the things that Doug Daniel is, and you will certainly find such things out soon enough anyway. Soon you will find out you can knock on his office door and talk to him about anything. He will clear off a chair for you and sit you down. He will offer you advice in a way that no other professor has been able to offer you.

He will tell you stories that, in time, you will have heard him tell before, but you won't care because he does it so well.

The exception to this will be when he launches into a story about his tenure at "Boys' Life." But you will listen anyway, and then you will make fun of him when he finishes.

He will grade you hard, and it will piss you off.

Someone in his public affairs reporting class once said, "People just don't realize that it's Doug Daniel they're dealing with. He'll squash your nuts into oblivion, then have a Triscuit." He will not give you an A you haven't earned. He will want you to push yourself to become not just a good journalist, but a great one. And someday, when you're done at OU, you'll be grateful he pushed you to do better.

Doug will, if you let him, teach you how to play poker and slapjack in a crowded bar. Sometimes he will offer to pay for your beer engage you in discussion and deliver to you bits of insight. He will try and try to lend you books of his to read until you finally relent.

If you ever drive any distance more than 50 miles with him, he will inevitably turn the radio to AM to find an evangelism talk show, and you will agree with him when he says they are indeed crazy, those people. Then, he will invent some game involving the alphabet and movie titles to pass the time. If you drive any distance less than 50 miles with him, you will find yourself stomping on an imaginary brake pedal when it looks like he might plow into the back of a car. Then he will deftly maneuver his Mazda around it, look at you and say, "What?"

You will soon have the opportunity to meet this man who we have been fortunate to know as a professor and as a friend, and you had better appreciate him like we do here, because we all love him.

Sincerely,

Students in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications at K-State.

Bush's campaign could explain rising gas prices

There doesn't seem to be any good explanation for the dramatic rise in gasoline pump prices seen around the nation.

The oil industry blames the new reformulated gasoline that is less polluting.

Others blame the Organization for Petroleum Exporting Countries for holding oil out on us.

The Republicans blame President Clinton.

Gov. George W. Bush blames Vice President Al Gore, just because Gore is running against Bush for president.

There also has been talk about some pipeline breaks and that the drought here in the Midwest has prevented some tanker ships from getting to port.

But none of this can account for the total rise in pump prices.

The increase in price of crude oil adds only 12 cents to a gallon of gasoline at the pump, and reformulating the gasoline adds only another 6 cents. The national average should be around $1.40 per gallon, not $1.67.

It surely doesn't account for the rise in Chicago on June 15-22 from $2.11 to $2.30, while simultaneously wholesale prices fell 29 cents from $1.60 to $1.31, or in Milwaukee, which experienced a rise in prices while wholesale prices declined 25 cents.

I would like to propose another possible explanation for high prices.

Could there be a Bush connection? The Bush family's money did come from oil, and the family still has friends in the oil business.

Now, I'm not one to lend myself to conspiracy theories, and this explanation is pure speculation and could well be preposterous, but meddling in national affairs to gain an advantage during a presidential campaign is not unprecedented.

During the 1968 presidential campaign, the Vietnam War was the predominant issue facing the country. Nixon was afraid President Lyndon Johnson might achieve a cease-fire with North Vietnam prior to the elections, eliminating an issue that was detrimental to the Democrats.

In an attempt to influence this to Nixon's favor, the Nixon people had communications with the North Vietnamese telling them to hold off with any possible cease-fire agreements with Johnson because they could get a better deal through a Nixon administration. It's unclear if this actually had an influence on the war, but the attempt was made.

During the 1980 presidential campaign, President Carter's impotence in resolving the Iranian hostage situation was one of the primary reasons he lost the re-election. It has subsequently become known that Reagan's people made a deal with the Iranians not to let the hostages go until after Reagan became elected.

The coincidence of the hostages getting released within minutes of Reagan's swearing-in really was no coincidence at all. This subsequently led to the failed Iranian arms-for-hostages fiasco since Reagan falsely believed he could continue to do business with a Khomeini regime.

In the current presidential campaign, Gore's great strength is that he is a member of a presidential administration that ran the United States during its greatest period of economic growth. It would be to Bush's political advantage if the economy turned sour right about now. What better way than to hit everybody directly in their wallets with high gasoline prices?

It would be to big oil's advantage to have such a friend as Bush as president.

The beauty of such a conspiracy, if it actually exists, is that it's so personal because nearly every American owns a car.

It's probably just a coincidence that the city hit the hardest, Chicago, is also a Democratic stronghold (as are Milwaukee and Detroit, two other Midwest cities hit hard).

It's also probably just a coincidence that in Bush's home state of Texas, pump prices are nearly the lowest in the nation at about $1.47 per gallon.

It's probably all just a big coincidence and is nothing more than mere price gouging by the oil companies and has everything to do with simple greed and nothing to do with presidential politics.

Preparations under way for holiday fun

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents will be able to begin their 4th of July holiday celebration with fireworks Saturday.

Fireworks stands around the city will start selling fireworks at noon Saturday and continue through midnight July 4. Fireworks are legal to discharge from 8 a.m. to midnight.

Sgt. Tim Hegarty, of the Riley County Police Department, said all fireworks obtained from Kansas fireworks stands are legal. If they are obtained from others, they might be illegal, such as bottle rockets.

"Anything you can buy in the city has been approved by the city and is good to go," he said.

He said there are several restrictions regarding where the fireworks can be discharged. They cannot be discharged at people, from cars or on public property, which includes city streets and parks.

"Private property is the place to discharge them within the city without approval," Hegarty said.

Active Chief Chuck Tannehill, of the Manhattan Fire Department, said since bottle rockets were outlawed about 10 years ago, problems they encounter around the holiday have decreased. Now, most fireworks incidents are related to human error and careless use.

"There are certain beverages that are associated with this holiday," he said. "It gives people a false sense of distance, and so they try to do silly things."

Tannehill said people should pay extra caution to using sparklers, especially with young children.

"We have problems with people giving small children sparklers," Tannehill said. "Sparklers burn at temperatures of 1,800 degrees. We may think these things are pretty, but sometimes if you hand them to children, they get scared. It can give them burns that will scar them for life."

Court upholds Miranda warning, resolves debate on suspects' rights

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Police still must warn the people they arrest of their "right to remain silent" when questioned, the Supreme Court ruled Monday as it resolved a bitter, 34-year debate over criminal suspects' rights.

The 7-2 ruling gave a new constitutional dimension to the court's landmark Miranda decision of 1966, perhaps the Supreme Court ruling Americans know best.

"Miranda has become embedded in routine police practice to the point where the warnings have become part of our national culture," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court.

"Miranda announced a constitutional rule that Congress may not supersede legislatively," he said. "We decline to overrule Miranda ourselves." As a result, police still are required to give the warnings made familiar to generations of Americans by movies and television or else risk getting suspects' confessions excluded as evidence against them.

Suspects must be told that anything they say may be used against them, they can remain silent or have a lawyer's help while answering, and that a lawyer will be appointed to help them if they cannot afford to hire one.

The new decision delighted civil liberties groups and disappointed some law enforcement organizations.

The court, far more liberal 34 years ago than it is now, sought to remedy "inherently coercive" interrogations by creating bright-line guidelines in its Miranda vs. Arizona decision. Courts previously had used a "totality-of-the-circumstances" test to determine whether a confession or incriminating statement had been given to police voluntarily.

The Constitution's Fifth Amendment says, "No person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

A federal appeals court last year threw the future of those warnings into doubt, ruling that Congress in effect overturned the Miranda decision by enacting a long-ignored 1968 law known as Section 3501.

That law purports to return the law, at least in federal cases, to pre-Miranda days. It says the presence or absence of any factor such as a Miranda warning need not be conclusive on the issue of voluntariness.

The Richmond-based 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the warnings imposed on police by the Miranda decision were never constitutionally mandated.

Monday's decision said the appeals court wrongly ignored the length of time Miranda has been around and the dozens of follow-up Supreme Court decisions it spawned.

"Whether or not we would agree with Miranda's reasoning and its resulting rule were we addressing the issue in the first instance," its age and those other precedents "weigh heavily against overruling it now," Rehnquist said.

Steven Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union praised the court for upholding the Miranda ruling, which he called "an emblem of fairness."

"Doing away with the police warnings would have sent a terrible message about our criminal justice system, that effective law enforcement depends on keeping people ignorant of their rights," Shapiro said.

But a disappointed Robert Scully of the National Association of Police Organizations called the Miranda ruling "a vehicle inviting routine efforts to exclude voluntary confessions," and predicted that Monday's decision "will only increase the amount of litigation on this point in state and federal courts."

"This case was not about whether giving the warnings made good public policy, which many law enforcement officers support," Scully said. "Rather, it was about the automatic exclusion of incriminating statements if there was a technical violation of the Miranda guidelines."

Eliau's relatives ask Court to block his return to Cuba

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Elian Gonzalez's Miami relatives asked the Supreme Court on Monday to block the little boy's return to Cuba. Unless the nation's highest court says otherwise, Elian and his father may leave the United States as early as Wednesday.

A federal appeals court unanimously rejected the Miami relatives' request for a rehearing Friday and said emphatically it would not take up the case again.

The appeals court said its earlier order requiring Elian's father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, to keep the 6-year-old boy in this country will dissolve at 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Lawyers for the Miami relatives filed a formal appeal with the full Supreme Court, and asked Justice Anthony M. Kennedy to keep Elian in the United States until that formal appeal is acted on.

Kennedy handles emergency matters from Florida for the high court.

A few weeks delay in the long legal fight over the boy "is a minimal cost in a case with stakes of such magnitude," Kennedy was told.

Elian was rescued off the Florida coast on Thanksgiving Day. His mother and 10 other people drowned after their boat sank en route from communist Cuba to the United States.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service decided the boy should be returned to his father, but the Miami relatives who cared for Elian after his rescue refused to relinquish him. On April 22, federal agents seized the boy and reunited him with his father in the Washington, D.C., area.

The formal appeal filed Monday said the case's legal issues "boil down to a single straightforward question: Can the INS deprive an alien child of his statutory and constitutional right to apply for asylum without conducting any hearing of any kind — or even without interviewing the child himself?"

The appeal said the INS decision in Elian's case violated his due-process rights.

Court upholds Miranda warning, resolves debate on suspects' rights

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Police still must warn the people they arrest of their "right to remain silent" when questioned, the Supreme Court ruled Monday as it resolved a bitter, 34-year debate over criminal suspects' rights.

The 7-2 ruling gave a new constitutional dimension to the court's landmark Miranda decision of 1966, perhaps the Supreme Court ruling Americans know best.

"Miranda has become embedded in routine police practice to the point where the warnings have become part of our national culture," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court.

"Miranda announced a constitutional rule that Congress may not supersede legislatively," he said. "We decline to overrule Miranda ourselves." As a result, police still are required to give the warnings made familiar to generations of Americans by movies and television or else risk getting suspects' confessions excluded as evidence against them.

Suspects must be told that anything they say may be used against them, they can remain silent or have a lawyer's help while answering, and that a lawyer will be appointed to help them if they cannot afford to hire one.

The new decision delighted civil liberties groups and disappointed some law enforcement organizations.

The court, far more liberal 34 years ago than it is now, sought to remedy "inherently coercive" interrogations by creating bright-line guidelines in its Miranda vs. Arizona decision. Courts previously had used a "totality-of-the-circumstances" test to determine whether a confession or incriminating statement had been given to police voluntarily.

The Constitution's Fifth Amendment says, "No person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

A federal appeals court last year threw the future of those warnings into doubt, ruling that Congress in effect overturned the Miranda decision by enacting a long-ignored 1968 law known as Section 3501.

That law purports to return the law, at least in federal cases, to pre-Miranda days. It says the presence or absence of any factor such as a Miranda warning need not be conclusive on the issue of voluntariness.

The Richmond-based 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the warnings imposed on police by the Miranda decision were never constitutionally mandated.

Monday's decision said the appeals court wrongly ignored the length of time Miranda has been around and the dozens of follow-up Supreme Court decisions it spawned.

"Whether or not we would agree with Miranda's reasoning and its resulting rule were we addressing the issue in the first instance," its age and those other precedents "weigh heavily against overruling it now," Rehnquist said.

Steven Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union praised the court for upholding the Miranda ruling, which he called "an emblem of fairness."

"Doing away with the police warnings would have sent a terrible message about our criminal justice system, that effective law enforcement depends on keeping people ignorant of their rights," Shapiro said.

But a disappointed Robert Scully of the National Association of Police Organizations called the Miranda ruling "a vehicle inviting routine efforts to exclude voluntary confessions," and predicted that Monday's decision "will only increase the amount of litigation on this point in state and federal courts."

"This case was not about whether giving the warnings made good public policy, which many law enforcement officers support," Scully said. "Rather, it was about the automatic exclusion of incriminating statements if there was a technical violation of the Miranda guidelines."

Elían's relatives ask Court to block his return to Cuba

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Elián Gonzalez's Miami relatives asked the Supreme Court on Monday to block the little boy's return to Cuba. Unless the nation's highest court says otherwise, Elián and his father may leave the United States as early as Wednesday.

A federal appeals court unanimously rejected the Miami relatives' request for a rehearing Friday and said emphatically it would not take up the case again.

The appeals court said its earlier order requiring Elián's father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, to keep the 6-year-old boy in this country will dissolve at 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Lawyers for the Miami relatives filed a formal appeal with the full Supreme Court, and asked Justice Anthony M. Kennedy to keep Elián in the United States until that formal appeal is acted on.

Kennedy handles emergency matters from Florida for the high court.

A few weeks delay in the long legal fight over the boy "is a minimal cost in a case with stakes of such magnitude," Kennedy was told.

Elián was rescued off the Florida coast on Thanksgiving Day. His mother and 10 other people drowned after their boat sank en route from communist Cuba to the United States.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service decided the boy should be returned to his father, but the Miami relatives who cared for Elián after his rescue refused to relinquish him. On April 22, federal agents seized the boy and reunited him with his father in the Washington, D.C., area.

The formal appeal filed Monday said the case's legal issues "boil down to a single straightforward question: Can the INS deprive an alien child of his statutory and constitutional right to apply for asylum without conducting any hearing of any kind — or even without interviewing the child himself?"

The appeal said the INS decision in Elián's case violated his due-process rights.

Securing THE STAGE

ABOVE: Kazar takes a moment during Travis Tritt's set to take a sip of water. One of his responsibilities as supervisor was to make sure his crew of five, as well as the other crews near the front stage, had water to drink. "I like country music," Kazar said. "I really like the slow songs."

RIGHT: Jason Kazar, senior in construction science, was the day shift front stage security supervisor and was responsible for keeping people clear of the stage and people's view, and the front part of the VIP section. Heavy rains Friday night left Kazar and his crew with much of the VIP area in standing water, which required filling.

Despite musicians on stage, Kazar focuses on trying to detour the water that flows through the VIP section. Kazar used many different methods, including muck, sand and using a pump truck to help remove the water.

Shirley Robertson, of Salina, Kan., tells a story about Kenny Chesney to Kazar Saturday. This is Kazar's fourth year of helping with Country Stampede. He volunteered for two years, and for the past two he has had the same security supervisor position. "It's a big party," Kazar said. "Everyone's trying to have fun, and I try to help them at it."

Human genetic code mapped

By PAUL RECER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton joined a government project and private venture Monday in announcing virtual completion of the first rough map of the human genetic code.

Clinton, joined by satellite transmission at the White House announcement by British Prime Minister Tony Blair, hailed completion of the work after a 10-year race that cost billions.

Clinton, who had helped calm a bitter rivalry between public and private groups racing to complete the genome map, beamed with pride at the announcement before a large gathering at the White House.

"Today we are learning the language in which God created life," Clinton said. "We are gaining ever more awe for the complexity, the beauty, the wonder of God's most divine and sacred gift."

He called the achievement a "day for the ages," and likened it to Galileo's celestial searchings and the mapping of the American wild by explorers Lewis and Clark. He also cautioned that the genetic map must never be used to segregate, discriminate or invade the privacy of human beings.

Francis Collins, head of the Human Genome Project of the National Institutes of Health, said the breakthrough allows humans for the first time to read "our own instruction book. Today, we celebrate the revelation of the first draft of the human book of life."

Blair said, "Let us be in no doubt about what we are witnessing today: A revolution in medical science whose implications far surpass even the discovery of antibiotics, the first great technological triumph of the 21st century."

At a press conference in London, hours ahead of the one scheduled here, the Human Genome Project announced that scientists had decoded the 3.1 billion sub-units of DNA, the chemical "letters" that make up the recipe of human life.

The chemical mapping of more than 90 percent of human DNA, seen as one of history's great scientific milestones, has been a keen fight between the Human Genome Project and the private company, Celera Genomics, of Rockville, Md.

"I am happy that today the only race we are talking about is the human race," Collins said.

Shares of Celera were up $4.25 to $129.50 in morning trading Monday on the New York Stock Exchange.

To map the human genome, the publicly financed Human Genome Project and the parallel private effort by Celera had to decipher some 3.1 billion sub-units of DNA, the chemical letters that code biological workings of humans.

Within the DNA there are an estimated 50,000 or more genes. These determine what a person inherits from parents and how well the cells function through out a lifetime. Flawed or missing genes can cause disease.

Mapping the entire human genome is seen as one of history's great scientific milestones, the biological equivalent of the moon landing.

Now, "the real work begins," Collins said.

"We've been racing down white water in a narrow channel trying to get the sequencing done," Collins said in an interview.

TDM Industries in Manhattan converts Ford Contours (shown) and Ford F-150s to run off compressed natural gas or gasoline. To make the vehicles capable of natural gas burning, modifications must be made to the fuel and exhaust systems along with engine calibration.

Natural gas alternative to unleaded gas

By JIM REINTJES
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new kind of gasoline allows people to refuel their cars at gas stations with no lines and gas for $1 a gallon.

Compressed natural gas could be a savior for people needing a break from rising gas prices, said John Pagen, business planning manager at Manhattan's Transportation Design and Manufacturing Co.

"It's as steady as a rock," Pagen said, regarding the price of natural gas. "One of the biggest supplies of natural gas in the world is near Liberal, Kansas."

TDM modifies a few thousand Ford Contours and F-Series pickups a year to run on compressed natural gas.

TDM is one of 20 stakeholders in Manhattan's Clean City status.

Manhattan became a Clean City on Oct. 4. Diane Stoddard, assistant city manager, said Clean Cities is a federal program coordinated by the U.S. Department of Energy. Manhattan is the 76th Clean City in the United States, and one of two cities to do so voluntarily.

Stoddard said most Clean Cities are larger metropolitan areas that have had serious air-quality problems and had to meet clean air mandates.

"We don't have an air-quality problem, but by being proactive we can eliminate future air-quality problems," Stoddard said.

Manhattan has 10 compressed natural gas vehicles in its fleet. Stoddard said Manhattan will continue to add CNG vehicles and other alternative fuel vehicles to its fleet when it is feasible.

Pagen said there are few CNG vehicles owned by the general public.

"The people who have them really like them," Pagen said. "Most are sold to general service administrations and the United States government."

Pagen said the performance of a CNG vehicle is the same as a gasoline-powered vehicle.

He said the fuel efficiency is comparable to gasoline, but it burns only 7 percent of the pollution gasoline does.

The CNG option on a Contour is $5,075. Pagen said there is a 50-percent tax credit on CNG vehicles.

"It's virtually a wash after the deductions and credits," Pagen said, regarding the $5,000 CNG option.

The Contour operates on gasoline and natural gas. While running on CNG, it can be switched to gasoline, but the engine must be turned off to switch from gasoline to CNG.

The F-150 pickups being modified by TDM are "dedicated" vehicles. They operate solely on CNG.

"This is an ideal vehicle for driving in the city," Pagen said.

Clinton says lowering gas tax will disrupt highway projects

By SONYA ROSS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton sought to temper calls for rolling back the federal gas tax in this summer of high fuel costs, saying Monday that such a move would disrupt federal highway projects and provide little relief to American motorists.

Speaking to reporters in the Rose Garden, the president noted that gas prices seem to be falling on their own, "for whatever reason," in places where they were notoriously high, such as the Midwest.

He urged continued pressure on the oil industry to keep prices falling and suggested that Congress think hard about the far-reaching ramifications before cutting the gas tax.

"If Congress wants to consider some sort of relief on the federal gas tax, it would be modest compared to the price increase, and they would have to be willing to defer substantial federal highway projects," Clinton said. "So, that's something they have to come to terms with."

Some congressional Republicans want to lower the federal gasoline tax in response to increasing pump prices. The matter found its way onto the campaign trail, with Texas Gov. George Bush, the GOP candidate, attributing the spike in gas prices to the Clinton administration's anti-pollution regulations. His Democratic opponent, Vice President Al Gore, put the blame on big oil companies that he says are out to maximize their profits at consumers' expense. Legislation introduced earlier this year would have rolled back 4.3 cents of the 18.4-cent tax for the rest of the year and suspended it entirely if average prices exceeded $2 a gallon.

Area band takes stage despite rain

The second time was the charm for the band Heartland.

Heartland, which had its concert rained out at last year's Country Stampede, was able to take the stage this year for its 11:30 a.m. performance Saturday. Heartland did, however, have a threat to the show this year with Friday night's rain.

"It was funny, because people were saying every time you guys come to Stampede, you bring rain with you," said Elma Rittenhouse, wife of Heartland's lead singer Tim Rittenhouse.

Despite a threat of rain and new surroundings, Tim Rittenhouse said he was happy with the performance.

"I was real pleased with it," he said. "I thought things went well."

Heartland performed 10 songs on stage, including hits by other artists, such as "Sold" by John Michael Montgomery and "Write this Down" by George Strait. Rittenhouse said he believes it's better to mimic the artists' songs than change them.

"General audience will judge you by how well you can cover someone else's music," he said. "One thing I've learned after 10 years — if you take a cover song and try to put your own style, everybody hates it. You do the best to match whoever had it first. You don't try to steal it and change it. That never works."

While most of the songs Heartland performed were from other artists, there was one song, "Running out of Reasons," which Heartland can call its own.

"I got that song from a friend of mine down in Nashville," Rittenhouse said. "Jonathan Cross and Mark Rossy wrote that song. Everybody's got to have a flagship song, and that was kind of it for us. It got us in a lot of radio doors."

Ironically, Heartland ended its performance with a tune from George Strait called "Heartland." However, Tim said the song wasn't how the band got its name.

"We actually had named the group before that song came out," Tim said. "I was watching that movie and thought, 'man, that would be cool.' Usually we either try to start or end with it. Songs like 'Heartland' come in every once in a while and just work out for you."

The success the band has enjoyed has not let its members forget it still has a long way to go.

"When you're pursuing a dream real hard, you work all week and play all weekend," Rittenhouse said. "We're still loading most of our own equipment. It's a lot of work."

Best act at Stampede: "Sawyer Brown. He probably got the crowd's attention the best."
— Cody Compton, Manhattan

Weirdest situation to deal with at the Stampede: "People showing off their privates to each other."
— security employee Andy Taylor, Fort Riley

Best reason to pay more for seats closest to the stage: "They're good seats and we stay in the shade. If I was 10 rows back, I probably wouldn't come."
— Margo Brashears, Olathe, Kan., who has had the same front-row center seat for five years.

Best reason to have the farthest seat from the stage: "You can sit back here and see everything and everybody."
— Kerry Stewart, Tonganoxie, Kan.

Philip Morris reaches agreement to buy Nabisco

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A little over a year after getting out of the cigarette business, the nation's No. 1 cookie and cracker maker is back with Big Tobacco.

Philip Morris Companies Inc., the world's largest tobacco firm and parent company of Kraft Foods, said Sunday it has reached an agreement to purchase Nabisco Holdings Corp. for $14.9 billion plus the assumption of $4 billion in debt.

Philip Morris chairperson and chief executive Geoffrey C. Bible said in a statement that the purchase at $55 a share will greatly expand the company's food offerings.

"The combination of Kraft and Nabisco will create the most dynamic company in the food industry, both in terms of absolute earnings levels and revenue and earnings growth rates," Bible said.

Kraft and Nabisco together produced revenue of $34.9 billion last year, Philip Morris said. The combined food company is expected to be second in the world only to Nestle of Switzerland, which has annual sales in excess of $35 billion.

Nabisco Holdings, which makes Ritz crackers, Snackwell's snacks, Oreo cookies and Life Savers candy, is 80.6-percent owned by Nabisco Group of Parsippany, N.J.

Nabisco Group said Sunday that after shedding the Nabisco Holdings unit, what remained of the group — essentially its cash from the Nabisco sale — would be sold to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for $9.8 billion.

Ironically, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco had been a subsidiary of the group — previously known as R.J. Nabisco — before it was spun off in March 1999 as a separate publicly traded entity. It makes Winston and Camel brand cigarettes.

Philip Morris, which produces Marlboro, Benson & Hedges and Parliament brand cigarettes, also owns Miller Brewing Co. and such brands as Jell-O, Maxwell House, Oscar Mayer and Post cereals. The purchase fills a gap in its food portfolio, which had not included cookies and crackers.

The deal will add 18 brands to its existing 55 brands.

Investors were pleased by the deals. Shares of Nabisco Holdings rose $1.063 to $52.688, on the New York Stock Exchange on Monday morning. Shares of Nabisco Group rose $1.438 to $27, Philip Morris rose $3.313 to $26.938, while R.J. Reynolds rose $3.125 to $30, also on the NYSE.

Committee hears testimony on high gas prices in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — There were a lot of questions but few answers for a legislative committee trying to determine why Missouri's gas prices are on the rise.

Meeting for the first time Tuesday, members of the House Interim Committee on Fuel Prices vowed to find reasons for the increases.

"We don't have those answers now," said Rep. Bill Ransdall, D-Waynesville, the panel's chairman. "We will have those answers before this committee turns in its final report."

Ransdall and others on the committee said they could not understand why gas in Jefferson City was $1.79 a gallon while in his district, 25 miles to the southwest, gas prices were much cheaper.

NYPD patrolman gets 15 years in immigrant torturing case

NEW YORK — A former patrolman was sentenced Tuesday to more than 15 years in prison for holding down Haitian immigrant Abner Louima as he was tortured in a police station bathroom.

The sentencing came after former officer Charles Schwarz delivered a vitriolic speech declaring his innocence.

U.S. District Court Judge Eugene Nickerson sentenced Schwarz to 15 years and 8 months, about half of the 30-year term given fellow officer Justin Volpe, who pleaded guilty to carrying out the attack on Louima. He also ordered Schwarz to pay Louima $277,495 in restitution.

Jesse Jackson urges inquiry into black teen-ager's death

KOKOMO, Miss. — A black teen-ager who was found hanging from a tree in his front yard in what investigators ruled a suicide may instead have been killed for dating two white girls, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said.

Jackson asked Gov. Ronnie Musgrove and the U.S. Justice Department to launch an investigation into the death of 17-year-old Raynard Johnson.

The civil rights leader said Tuesday that the death had the smell of Emmitt Till all around it, and these questions have to be answered. Till was a black teenager killed in Mississippi in 1955 for supposedly whistling at a white woman.

"The two young white girls and Johnson had been dating each other; that did not sit well with some people," Jackson said Monday.

The Marion County Sheriff's Office investigated the hanging and concluded that the honor student took his own life.

Rebel commanders reject calls to back pro-Moscow Chechen

NAZRAN, Russia — Chechen rebel field commanders said Tuesday they were determined to keep fighting Russian forces, despite far inferior numbers and a growing split in the militants' ranks.

The proclamation came after three militant commanders switched alliances and urged the rebels to support Mufti Akhmad Kadyrov, a Chechen who has been named head of the republic's Moscow-backed administration. The three commanders also wanted rebels to oust all foreign mercenaries fighting on the Chechen side.

Protesters fight to oust Navy from range in Vieques island

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico — Hurling iron bars at U.S. sailors and creeping under fences onto the Vieques island training ground, more than 150 demonstrators on Tuesday intensified their fight to oust the Navy from the range where it practices bombing and shelling.

Puerto Rican fishermen wielding the metal bars injured two U.S. sailors at sea, the Navy said. On the nearby island, guards arrested 164 Independence Party demonstrators who invaded the bombing range to disrupt the Navy's shelling.

THE ADVENTURE OF A
LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years
to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective — but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation — as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try — you won't regret it.

K-State volleyball signs 4 recruits

By JASON NICOL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

The K-State volleyball team added one of the best recruiting classes to its roster, with the signing of four top recruits to national letters of intent, head coach Jim McLaughlin said.

The signings, which were completed in early June, include twin sisters Cari and Kris Jensen, Lauren Goehring and Lisa Martin.

Cari Jensen, from Fowler High School in Fowler, Colo., was a two-time Gatorade Circle of Champions Volleyball Player of the Year for Colorado. She was a finalist for the Gatorade National High School Volleyball Player of the Year the past two seasons. She also was named the Rocky Mountain News and Denver Post Most Valuable Player at the 2A state championships.

Cari Jensen also was the only freshman and sophomore to ever be chosen for the Rocky Mountain News first team all-state.

Kris Jensen was successful at the high school level, too. She helped her sister lead Fowler High to three consecutive 2A state championships and was subsequently chosen for the Rocky Mountain News first team all-state and all-conference.

Both Jensens were athletes in basketball and track. Cari Jensen was twice named first all-state and Colorado Player of the Year in basketball by the Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Post. She was the reigning Ms. Basketball Colorado the past two seasons.

The two also accounted for all of the team's 48 points scored when Fowler won the 2A State Championship in track in 1998.

Also signing with the Cats was Lauren Goehring of Fort Worth, Texas. A graduate of Fossil Ridge High School, Goehring was a member of the U.S. Youth 17-under National Olympic Team.

She also trained with the U.S. Junior Olympic Team. She received the Offensive Player of the District award her junior year and was a two-time team MVP for Fossil Ridge.

Goehring was also awarded District MVP and was named to the Dallas Morning News first-team all-area team.

Called one of the most heavily recruited players in the nation by McLaughlin, Goehring chose K-State over Texas A&M, Washington and Penn State.

The fourth recruit to sign a letter of intent was Hutchinson High School graduate Lisa Martin.

She was named twice to the 6A first team all-state by Kansas Sports Magazine and was a two-time MVP for Hutchinson High. Martin was also named to the all-Ark Valley League team twice.

McLaughlin said this recruiting class will help to propel the volleyball program to the next level.

"This group will add to what we already have started here at Kansas State," McLaughlin said. "They are a solid core that complement each other very well that when they get on the floor together will be something that pushes us even further to our goal of making this an elite program."

Women's rowing recruits twin sisters

By JASON NICOL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

The K-State women's rowing team added two more recruits Friday with the signing of twin sisters Jennifer and Jane Smedley, Coach Jenny Hale said.

The Smedleys are graduates of Mathews High, in Mathews, Va., where they were successful in rowing competitions.

Both sisters were part of a four person team that won the Northern Virginia Championships from 1998 to 2000. They also were members of Mathews High four-member team this spring that did not record a loss in Northern Virginia, took first place in the Statesbury Cup in Philadelphia, took the top spot at the Scholastic Nationals and subsequently placed second at the Canadian Nationals in St. Catherine's, Ontario.

They also are members of the Mobjack Rowing Club and have won several medals in singles, doubles and quadruple sculling events.

Hale expressed the team's excitement from the signing of these two athletes. She also indicated that both women will move from rowing to the coxswain's seat.

"Jenny and Jane both bring some great racing experiences with them to Kansas State," Hale said. "They have never had a losing season in all of their time as junior rowers, and we are looking for them to translate their intimate knowledge of the stroke and what it takes to be a great rower into coxswaining our team."

The Smedleys are the seventh and eighth recruits for the rowing team. Samantha Allen, Kathryn Baxter, Rachel Daily, Ingrid Shwaiko, Lara Schrock and Lori Holcomb make up the rest of the 2000-2001 signees.

Women's track freshman continues to win at U.S. Junior National Meet

By JASON NICOL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Freshman Amy Mortimer continued her streak of top finishes Saturday when she won gold and silver medals at the United States Junior National Meet in Denton, Texas.

Mortimer won the silver medal in her first race, with a second place finish in the 1,500 meters. She had a time of 4:32.10, 0.6 seconds behind Stanford runner Lauren Fleshman.

In her second race, Mortimer won the 3,000 meters race with a time of 9:63.53.

While happy with her performance in the 3,000 meters, head coach Cliff Rovelto expressed some disappointment with Mortimer's execution in the 1,500 meter race.

"She and Coach Cole were really disappointed after the race," Rovelto said. "She ran too conservative and left the girl in the race who shouldn't have been there and was just out-kicked."

Freshman Chika Onyebuchi also participated Saturday. She placed third in her heat with a time of 24.67 seconds in the 200 meters. However, that time was not fast enough to advance her to the finals.

Tex Winter, K-State's all-time winningest basketball coach and current assistant coach for the Los Angeles Lakers, accepts a bronze bust of himself during a reception at Bramlage Coliseum earlier this year. The bronze bust was created by Hayden Abbott, Winter's former player.

Former K-State basketball coach to sign biography in Union

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State basketball coach Tex Winter will be signing his newly released biography 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday in the K-State Student Union.

His biography, "Trial by Basketball: The Life and Times of Tex Winter," discusses his career throughout his 53 seasons as a basketball coach. The book will be available for $22.95.

"We're really excited that we have the opportunity to have Tex Winter visit us," Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said. "He is so well-known. Myself, along with a lot of other people will be really excited to meet him and talk with him."

Winter, now assistant coach of the Los Angeles Lakers, was K-State's first full-time assistant coach in 1947.

He worked for K-State until 1951, when he left to coach at Marquette University in Milwaukee. He returned to K-State in 1953 as the head coach for 15 years. During that time, he posted an overall record of 265-117 and won eight Big 8 Championships. His 1957-58 team defeated the University of Kansas, leading them to a Big 8 Championship victory.

His team was rated first in the nation by both United Press International and the Associated Press, and Winter was named the National United Press International Coach of the Year for the 1958-59 season.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for alumni, current students and the community," Von Winter, general book buyer, said. "It's kind of neat that someone so famous can come back to Manhattan and call this home."

Coffee/sweet shop now open in Union

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union will have a new aroma to it when the coffee/sweet shop opens at 7 a.m. today.

Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said the coffee/sweet shop is the final new area to open in the renovation.

"It's just exciting, because it's been a long time coming," she said.

The coffee/sweet shop will be open from 7 to 11 a.m. through the summer and will go to full hours the week before the fall semester starts, Snyder said.

The menu will include Starbucks coffee brands, whole beans, espressos and cappuccinos, freshly baked pastries and other desserts.

Snyder said there won't be any specials for the opening of the shop.

"We may after we get it down pat and really get going," she said. "We want to see how it goes and see how it flows."

There will be a naming contest (similar to the one for the Cats' Den) in September.

3-percent tuition hike passed for 2001-2002

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is taking a 3-percent tuition increase passed late last week by the Board of Regents in stride.

The increase, slated to be in place for the 2001-2002 school year, is projected to generate $5.5 million for the state, Marvin Burris, director of fiscal affairs, said.

The money will go directly back to the universities, he said.

K-State will use the majority of its share to increase faculty salaries.

This increase is causing much less concern among universities than last year's two increases, something that was an unusual occurrence, K-State President Jon Wefald said.

"I've been here since 1986, and that was the first time I'd ever seen that happen," he said.

The regents raised tuition once in June 1999 by 2.5 percent and once again in December by $3.20 per credit hour. This was to counteract a 1-percent across-the-board budget cut by Gov. Bill Graves.

Board director Bill Docking said the regents were left with no choice.

"That cut right into bone and muscle," he said. "That money needed to be restored. To offset the 1-percent cut, we had to increase tuition."

Those two increases will go into effect this fall. Wefald said that although he cannot make an exact prediction, he doesn't foresee this happening again. Students and faculty are clearly much happier with this year's numbers.

"The differences between students and regents were minuscule," he said. "If students had their way, it probably would have been a 2.5-percent increase instead."

The board goes through a long process to arrive at a final number, Docking said. The Budget and Tuition Committee comes up with a number, then a group comprising student leaders, university officials and board members evaluates it and makes any needed adjustments. In this case, the committee proposed only a slightly different number than what was passed, Docking said. Instead of increasing tuition $6.50 for all non-resident students at all six state universities, they modified it to $7.50 for K-State, University of Kansas and Wichita State University and $6 for Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and Pittsburg State University.

"It wouldn't have raised enough revenue to counteract inflation," Docking said.

The proposed 3-percent increase passed without any modifications, he said.

Docking said the board kept last year's two increases in mind when looking at a number for this year.

"We wanted to be really careful we didn't increase tuition any more than it needed to be," he said.

To offset the recent increases, the regents have requested $1.8 million from the Legislature for additional student aid, Kim Wilcox, regents executive director, said.

"It's hard to know what will happen," he said. "The Legislature won't convene until January. We're optimistic, though."

State Board of Education passes changes to licensing regulations

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Speech pathology majors will be seeing some changes due to new licensing regulations recently passed by the State Board of Education.

Prior to the new regulations, speech pathology majors wanting to work in school systems received two kinds of credentials: a certificate through the College of Education and a license through their profession or business.

With the new licensure program, educators no longer receive certificates. They receive licenses, and with that comes different standards and requirements. Under the new regulations, speech pathology majors will no longer receive certificates, now called licenses, through the College of Education. They only need their license through their employer.

Julie Schraeder-Neidenthal, director of clinical service, said while many think having only one license is a good thing, she does not. In order to be certified through the State Board of Education, speech pathology majors had to complete two externships, one working in an adult medical site and one in a child education site. Completing both was required in order to be certified through the board. Now that the only license comes through their profession, both externships might not be required by K-State.

Schraeder-Neidenthal said she's afraid not having this requirement will have a negative effect.

"If we no longer require both externships, a student may graduate without having that amount of experience with school-aged children," she said. "They might not be as prepared to work in that setting with that population."

She said she is also worried that not having a certificate will affect how they are treated in the work force.

"I'm afraid that way down the road it may change the working conditions of speech pathology in schools, and perhaps they wouldn't all be positive changes," Schraeder-Neidenthal said.

With a certificate, they work under the same regulations, such as the number of students they are allowed to work with, as teachers. She said she fears the lack of a certificate might lead to working with too many students at once.

"Perhaps our role would become more of a consultant than a profession that directly provides service to the children," Schraeder-Neidenthal said.

While it will be a change for speech pathology majors, and several others, such as school nurses, Jan Wissman, assistant dean of education, said she thinks on the whole it is a positive change.

"It's exciting, given that we're moving in the right direction," Wissman said. "It's a new way of thinking for Kansas. It emphasizes performance rather than input."

She said the new regulations allow them to concentrate on more outcome-based issues.

"We've been working with outdated standards," Wissman said. "The licensure program gives us the ability to develop contemporary outcomes based on knowledge and outcomes."

She said the new program would put students at an advantage.

"It won't change our program a whole lot, but as professionals in the field it will," Wissman said. "Our state will look like some more of the other states."

Bill Wagnon, State Board of Education member, said he thinks the new licensure program will enhance how students are perceived within the field.

"It will raise the character of the profession," he said. "It demonstrates they can go to college and have the ability to teach and are effective at it."

Stampede 2000 Concert Cleanup

Crews restore Tuttle Creek after Country Stampede

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The crowds and bands might have left Country Stampede grounds, but there are still more than 100 people at Tuttle Creek State Park cleaning the remains of the three-day festival.

Cleanup for Country Stampede 2000 at Tuttle Creek State Park began immediately when the festival ended Sunday night and continued through Tuesday evening. Muddy conditions slightly hampered the cleanup tasks.

Davoren, head maintenance and custodial supervisor, said the rain last weekend has complicated cleanup, but it hasn't hindered the timing too much. One hundred Fort Riley soldiers and other Stampede employees took to the festival grounds Monday morning to pick up trash left by concert goers.

Jena Davoren, head maintenance and custodial supervisor, said the rain last weekend has complicated cleanup, but it hasn't hindered the timing too much. One hundred Fort Riley soldiers and other Stampede employees took to the festival grounds Monday morning to pick up trash left by concert goers.

"Basically, it has to be restored to the condition it was in," he said. "The idea of leave it as you found it."

Lovin said Stampede workers are cooperative with the cleanup. "Stampede's been good partners about returning the park to its status," he said.

Still, a concert of this size can adversely affect the land it uses, he said. "Usually as far as if we don't have any major rain it browns the turf and grass," he said. "We've concentrated on repairs in certain areas every year."

Pfc. Don Zdan, of Fort Riley, volunteered to help clean the grounds and said it was more work than he expected.

"This was tore the hell up," he said. "We go around picking up all the cigarette butts, paper, trash, cups — everything."

Department of Justice hesitant about Sprint-WorldCom merger

By MATT MOORE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSON, Miss. — Officials at Sprint Corp. and WorldCom Inc. maintain their merger is still viable, despite a Justice Department suit and the companies' withdrawal of its merger application with the European Commission.

Analysts are less optimistic and fault government regulators.

"Based on the tone from the Department of Justice and the European officials, it seems as if they have no interest in seeing this deal go through in any shape or form," David

ON THE WEB

For more about the Sprint Corp. and WorldCom Inc. merger, see www.world-com-merger.com.

Burks, Hilliard Lyons, said Tuesday, "It seems as if they couldn't get a fair shake."

"The pressure just kept building on them," Steve Shook, Wachovia

Securities Inc., said. "These guys wanted concessions beyond what Sprint and WorldCom thought was reasonable."

The Justice Department suit and the companies' withdrawal came a day after the European Union's antitrust chief, Mario Monti, said WorldCom and Sprint had presented a less-than-satisfactory response to European concerns that the merged company would dominate high-level Internet access around the world.

In its suit filed Tuesday, the Justice Department also raised concerns that consumer prices would increase if the combination of the nation's second- and third-largest phone companies was approved.

Morgan Keegan & Co. analyst Ramkrishna Kasargod said both companies could try to restructure the deal, but that could face opposition from Sprint shareholders who won't want to see their company carved up for the sake of approving the merger.

"At this stage in the game, I don't think the deal is officially dead yet," he said. "WorldCom and Sprint will have to get together and see what makes sense for both companies."

Daniel P. Reingold, an analyst with Credit Suisse First Boston, said Sprint could emerge from the post-merger fallout as the more desirable of the two companies.

In a written report, he said if the merger breaks, WorldCom could be in a strategic limbo for a long period. Sprint is likely to be bid on by several others including Deutsche Telekom, Quest and BellSouth — with a $75 to $80 (per share) takeout price, he said.

Other analysts concurred, noting that Sprint could be a likely acquisition for the German phone company, which is hungry for a domestic presence in the U.S. long-distance and wireless markets. Deutsche Telekom already holds a 10 percent stake in Westwood, Kan.-based Sprint.

Investors weren't as optimistic. Shares of Sprint were down $1.188 to $58.375 on the New York Stock Exchange, though shares of the Clinton-based WorldCom enjoyed a nice spike upward, rising $2.188 to $39.688 on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

WorldCom's may also prove to be a target, with Deutsche Telekom a possible suitor, Shook said. "Even though Deutsche Telekom has a little bit of Sprint, even they could be interested in WorldCom," Shook said. "There's other players that could be interested, and most of them that are viable are international players."

Another alternative WorldCom could consider is selling off some of its assets.

reduce competition

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — The Justice Department said the proposed WorldCom-Sprint merger would reduce competition in the following U.S. markets:

— Long-distance service to residential customers. WorldCom has 19 percent of residential telephone lines; Sprint about 8 percent. Combined with AT&T, they have 80 percent.

— Internet backbone service, the hardware that connects Internet service providers with Internet users. WorldCom operates the largest Internet backbone, with 37 percent of all Internet traffic. Sprint has the second-largest backbone, with 16 percent of the traffic.

— International long-distance between the United States and more than 50 foreign countries. In each of these markets, the combined WorldCom and Sprint shares are at least 30 percent. Combined with AT&T, the top three have at least 80 percent of these markets.

— International private lines between the United States and more than 60 foreign countries. In this market for dedicated lines used exclusively by a particular customer, the combined WorldCom and Sprint shares in each market are at least 37 percent, and, combined with AT&T, the top three have at least 82 percent.

— Data network services to large business customers in the United States.

— Custom network services for large businesses in this country.

Biological weapons still threat, bioterrorism consultant says

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The United States should keep at least a small amount of smallpox to match the biological warfare capabilities of Russia, a bioterrorism consultant said Tuesday.

William C. Patrick III warned about 130 state employees during a bioterrorism conference that the United States and other nations are vulnerable to a smallpox attack because they no longer vaccinate against the disease.

Although the virus has been all but eradicated, Patrick said it remains highly contagious.

"That to me represents the ultimate in biological warfare," Patrick said.

Patrick also said Russia has violated a 1972 biological weapons agreement.

"I don't think that we can trust the Russians," Patrick said.

Patrick, of Frederick, Md., also said the United States should install proper air filtration systems in its embassies to prepare for bioterrorist attacks.

He said American embassies already are well-protected from bombings, which means terrorists are likely to use other methods of attack.

Patrick said the greatest bioterrorism threat is the possibility of a rogue nation like Iran or Iraq sending someone to the United States to release a deadly powder at an event attended by many important people.

Powders are much more potent and more easily disseminated than liquids, Patrick said.

He said terrorists could use such diverse items as garden sprayers, leaf blowers, fire extinguishers or airplanes to release powder.

Patrick said factors that influence the effectiveness of airborne biological agents include wind, humidity, the time of day, particle size and the speed at which the agents are released.

The two-day conference is being sponsored by the Division of Emergency Management of the Adjutant General's Department.

Survey says U.S. Consumer's confidence on decline due to economy's rising interest rates, gas prices

By RACHEL BECK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Americans in a private survey grew more concerned about the direction of the U.S. economy, with rising interest rates and soaring gasoline prices beginning to eat away at consumers' confidence.

The private survey was issued Tuesday as the Federal Reserve began a two-day meeting into whether to raise interest rates for the seventh time in a year in an attempt to slow overall growth and keep inflation under control.

The Conference Board said its Consumer Confidence Index fell to 138.8 in June from a revised 144.7 in May, which matched the all-time high reached in January. The June index came in below Wall Street analysts' expectations.

While the reading dropped nearly 6 points, it still remains near record levels and was not seen as a sign of an end of economic growth. But consumers did begin to indicate that they were less optimistic about economic conditions.

"While latest signals suggest that the U.S. economic activity should decelerate in coming months, consumers are not expecting this record-breaking economic expansion to end any time soon," said Lynn Franco, director of the Conference Board's research center.

The muted report on consumer confidence raised expectations on Wall Street that the Fed would hold rates steady this week, after imposing six interest-rate increases in the past year.

Stock prices were rising Tuesday: The Dow Jones industrial average was up 42.39 to 10,585.42 at midday.

The index, based on a monthly survey of some 5,000 households, is closely watched because consumer spending makes up about two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

Some recent reports, including home sales, retail sales, factory orders and unemployment, have offered signs that the economy may be slowing a bit. Rising gasoline prices on top of a steady rise in interest rates are putting pressure on consumers.

In the consumer confidence survey, the index that measures feelings about present overall conditions fell 3.4 points to 180.2, while the index that measures expectations for the next six months fell a significant 7.5 points to 111.2.

The business-financed Conference Board said more people expect business conditions to worsen in the next six months. They also see their incomes declining and jobs being harder to find. Fewer consumers indicated their intentions to travel on a vacation or buy a car or a home.

But even with growing pessimism, many economists don't believe consumers will stop spending soon.

Most economic fundamentals remain strong, especially the tight labor market, which has made it easy for most people to find work, said Bryan Jordan, an economist at Banc One Investment Advisors in Columbus, Ohio.

"Everything is still working in the consumers' favor, and they aren't going to slow down yet," he said.

"The question is whether things continue to move faster than the Fed's speed limit."

2 Wichita teen-agers arrested on charges of Internet fraud

WICHITA — Two 15-year-old Wichita boys were arrested on charges that they scammed America Online members after sending them an official looking e-mail asking for an alternative credit card number because of billing problems.

The Internet scam affected about a dozen residents in Oklahoma, Georgia, Oregon, Texas and Maryland and as far away as France, Lt. Tom Spencer said.

Woman tries to snatch infant from Wichita mall parking lot

WICHITA — A woman tried to snatch a 6-week-old baby from a Wichita mall parking lot after spraying the baby's mother with Mace, police said.

The mother had strapped her baby daughter into the car seat of the family's sport utility vehicle Tuesday outside the Toys R Us store at Eastgate Shopping Center.

She was preparing to leave when a woman in her late 20s or early 30s approached and said her car had been hit. The woman then sprayed the mother with mace, pushed her and tried unsuccessfully to remove the child from the car seat, Lt. Paul Moser said.

The woman fled in a green or teal Honda after two witnesses came to the aid of the baby's mother, who was yelling for help, Moser said.

Police said Wednesday a woman was in custody.

1936 Heisman winner dies at home in apparent suicide

HIGHTSTOWN, N.J. — Larry Kelley, the second college football player to win the Heisman Trophy, apparently shot himself to death at his home. He was 85 and had been ailing.

Police arrived at Kelley's home Tuesday after a report of a person with a gunshot wound, said Angelo Onofri, an assistant in the Mercer County prosecutor's office.

Oracle hires private detectives to look into Microsoft's allies

REDWOOD SHORES, Calif. — The chairman of Oracle Corp. owned up Wednesday to hiring private investigators to look into the "covert activities" of Microsoft Corp. and insisted his company was only doing its "civic duty."

"I feel very good about what we did," said Larry Ellison, confirming that Oracle hired Investigative Group International Inc. to investigate allies of rival Microsoft.

He said the detective work showed that Microsoft paid trade and policy groups to influence public opinion during its antitrust trial.

Public tax dollars can be used for religious school computers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The government can provide computers for religious schools, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday in a decision that significantly narrowed the constitutionally required separation of religion and government.

The 6-3 ruling was praised by supporters of private school tuition vouchers — government initiatives to help parents of children who do not attend public schools.

The justices said a Louisiana parish can distribute money for instructional equipment — including computers, books, maps and film strip projectors — to private schools as long as it's done in a "secular, neutral and nonideological" way.

Report: disease on increase as public health services fail

LONDON — Earthquakes and other natural disasters may have captured donations and headlines, but preventable diseases killed far more people — 13 million people in 1999, according to a report published Wednesday by the Red Cross.

An estimated 150 million people have died from AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria alone since 1945, compared to 23 million in wars, said the World Disasters Report issued by the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

Internet relationships can be dangerous

Many people give false names, look up personal information

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Johnny Segovia, junior in mechanical engineering

"I've been in chat rooms and met people, and I don't even use my own name, so I'm sure other people lie about who they are."

Carlene Nickel, junior in finance

On more Internet and chat room regulations: "I think you should be a certain age, so little kids can't get into it."

Elisabeth Schafer, senior in elementary education

"I don't get into chat rooms, but I have friends that have, and they've met people off the Internet. I had a friend that went to New York to meet a guy, and she said he was OK, but we all thought it was dangerous. I think it's too scary."

By NANCY HULL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pretending to be another person might sound like harmless fun.

But when communicating online, the mystery person on the other side of the computer screen can become dangerous.

The recent findings with accused serial killer John E. Robinson Sr. meeting women on the Internet before they disappeared highlights the dark side of Internet relationships.

"You never know who you're dealing with or the intent of their actions," said Lt. Herb Crosby of the Riley County Police Department.

Crosby said when people reveal their names to someone over the Internet, trouble can follow.

Crosby said people should question someone they meet in a chat room or by e-mail when the person knows detailed information about them.

"Someone might rattle off information and say it's from a friend when it's really from research,"

Crosby said.

Regardless of the dangers, people still are meeting each other online.

Robin Tripkos, junior in marketing, said he often meets people online.

"When you meet people with common views, it's easy to start talking a lot," Tripkos said.

Tripkos said he recently received a picture over the Internet from a female he met in a chat room - but when he met her in person, she wasn't the female in the picture.

Tripkos said he realized people often lie when communicating online.

"If it seems too good to be true, it probably is," Tripkos said.

Crosby said there are precautions to take when meeting people online. He said if someone knows where the person is employed at, it's a good idea to do some research and communicate with other people who might know the person.

He said when people do meet in person, it should be in a public place.

But meeting a person isn't the only danger. Crosby said there are a number of sites where addresses, birth dates and Social Security numbers can be accessed by simply plugging in a person's name.

Internet mapping sites allow people to draw lines that will guide them directly to another person, Crosby said.

Harvard Townsend, Computing and Network Services director, said there are options for K-State students who don't want their information to be public.

Townsend said students should contact the registrar's office if they would like information removed from the campus phone book or the university Web site.

Townsend said there is a downside to having personal information omitted from public access.

"It's a tradeoff for finding people that need to be contacted," Townsend said. "I also know that people have met a lot of great people through the Internet."

U.S. Supreme Court settles Elian Gonzalez custody battle

By GEORGE GEDDA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — With a final wave, Elian Gonzalez ended his American saga Wednesday after the Supreme Court cleared the 6-year-old boy's return to Cuba and settled a custody battle tinged with anti-communist passions in the United States.

ON THE WEB

For more about Elian Gonzalez and his Supreme Court custody battle, visit the State Department's Web site at www.state.gov/www/regions/whal/index.html or the Cuban newspaper, Granma, at www.granma.cu.

Seven months after he was lifted from the sea — his mother lost in that desperate journey to American shores — Elian took off in one of two chartered planes with his father, family and friends to return to a nation that calls him its "boy hero" yet vowed to give him a normal life.

His father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, said at Washington Dulles International Airport: "We are very happy to be going home." He thanked the American people and the government for their support and expressed the wish for better relations between Cuba and the United States.

The high court wrote the last chapter of Elian's tortuous journey with decisive brevity, issuing an order rejecting a formal appeal filed by the boy's Miami relatives and a separate emergency request to postpone his departure.

Within hours, the boy who captivated Americans at every turn — whether mischievously playing outside his relatives' home, screaming in fright as federal agents snatched him from that house, or smiling back in the arms of his father — was on his way.

"The legal battle is over," said Gregory Craig, attorney for Juan Miguel.

The Miami relatives who had fought so long to keep Elian in the United States had no immediate comment.

In the end, after the months of heated words, high emotions, legal wrangling and his seizure by federal agents in the home of his Cuban-American relatives, Elian's course was set by a brief order from the high court.

"The application for stay presented to Justice Kennedy and by him referred to the court is denied. The petition for a writ of certiorari (the appeal) is denied."

Before leaving in a motorcade for Dulles, Juan Miguel thanked his hosts at the Youth for Understanding International Exchange in Washington's Cleveland Park neighborhood for their hospitality.

"We've made a lot of really nice friends and we appreciate your humanity, and your kindness and your warmth and understanding to me and my family in a period that has been difficult for us," he told them in Spanish.

Elian and his Cuban playmates were given pillow globes. Juan Miguel got a book to give to Cuban President Fidel Castro on the organization's behalf. An inscription read, "We hope that someday soon, we will be able to establish cultural relations and cultural normalization between Cuba and the U.S. and would be willing to play a role in that."

Their passions stoked for months over the custody dispute, Cubans were urged by their communist government to remain calm.

"Now more than ever, our population must behave with the most dignity, serenity and discipline," the government said on Cuban state television.

People in Cardenas, Elian's hometown, said friends were preparing to go to Havana to greet him. But no plans were announced for a splashy homecoming.

Summoned by the government, Cubans had demonstrated by the hundreds of thousands for the return of the boy they call not just a hero, but "symbolic child." But Cuban officials said in anticipation of the boy's eventual return that they would try to give him a normal life.

Asked at a White House news conference if he had any thoughts about sending Elian back to Cuba, President Bill Clinton said, "If he and his father decided they wanted to stay here, it would be fine with me."

He said, however, that Juan Miguel was determined to be "a good father, a loving father, committed to the son's welfare. And we upheld here what I think is a quite important principle, as well as what is clearly the law of the United States. Do I wish it had unfolded in a less dramatic, less traumatic way for all concerned? Of course I do."

Attorney General Janet Reno said she was pleased that the Supreme Court declined to review the case.

"This little boy now knows that he can remain with his father," Reno said. "All involved have had an opportunity to make their case — all the way to the highest court in the land. I hope that everyone will accept the Supreme Court's decision and join me in wishing this family, and this special little boy, well."

Through June 11, the Justice Department spent $1.8 million on the case.

Among the protesters outside the Miami courthouse, Laura Vianello cried: "This is an outrage, there is no solidarity among us. This is the land of the free?"

The demonstrators were turned back when they tried to march toward the building. Angry protesters also gathered outside the Little Havana home of Elian's Miami relatives, the home where agents burst in to snatch him in April and give him back to his father.

A federal appeals court's stay on Elian's departure dissolved at 4 p.m. EDT Wednesday.

Since Elian's rescue from the Atlantic Ocean on Thanksgiving Day, he has been at the center of a custody battle between his Cuban father and Cuban-American relatives.

For Castro, getting Elian out of the clutches of his powerful adversary was a priority — although Washington has been in agreement with Havana that the boy belongs with his father, and acted with force to reunite the two.

Bird-brained jokes, puns become a matter of LIFE or DEATH

STORY AND ART BY BECKY WILSON

Mel Gibson stars this summer in a tale of the search for freedom and of rebellion against British oppression.

Sure, he's also in the New World "Braveheart" offering "The Patriot," but moviegoers would be ill advised to miss "Chicken Run," the first feature-length Claymation film from the Aardman animation studios.

"Chicken Run" is a barnyard retelling of "The Great Escape," with poultry, led by a particularly stubborn hen named Ginger (Julia Sawalha). And she needs every ounce of stubbornness she possesses to lead her coopmates; the Tweedys' farm is an unfriendly place.

Quiet lines of coops visually echo concentration camps; the characters' level of fear skyrockets with the introduction of a mechanized, coldly efficient method of death.

Such conditions require planning to overcome. Hence, these chickens are organized — plans, disguises, secret entrances, mercenary contacts.

"Chicken Run" is a story of life and death. More importantly, it's funny, if a bit dependent on puns and, well, bird-brained jokes.

Nick Park's chicken design is splendid — inherently comic, particularly when a great lot of them line up for calisthenics, yet capable of calm, feathered dignity.

The time and work that went into realizing the plasticine world is quickly apparent.

When it rains, everything glistens. When Rocky the Rooster and Ginger are trapped in the pie-making machine, they are surrounded by gears, belts and a great, riveted gravy cauldron.

When the chickens plot, their headquarters features maps, communications and a teapot for both refreshments and to misdirect Mr. Tweedy as a faux chicken when dressed up with a few feathers.

Despite a casual disregard for the laws of physics at the end, "Chicken Run" is satisfying summer fare.

Ignore any thought that animation is for children only and watch this quirky little film. And afterwards, go out for a bite to eat. Just don't order anything that tastes "like chicken."

Pomeroy, Ruskabank to perform free concert at Rusty's

By NANCY FOSTER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville favorites Pomeroy and Ruskabank will be returning to Manhattan to give a performance at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon tonight.

The free show will begin at 8 in the back patio area.

"We're excited," Kip Etter, bartender, said. "Anytime we get the chance to have a live band to come play here we get excited, especially of the caliber and quality they are."

Both bands, which began locally, have encountered much success.

Pomeroy was the winner of the Opus 12 band competition in 1998. Since then, it has relocated to the Kansas City area and has been playing with national bands, such as 311.

Etter said he expects a large crowd for the concert due to the bands' large followings.

He also said Chance is planning to bring in some pretty big acts during the summer, though he couldn't confirm any yet.

However, Dustin Evans and the Good Times band will play in July and also Nov. 10, the night before the Nebraska vs. K-State football game.

Archbishop free after hostage ordeal

By MICHELE KOIDIN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — A man seeking help on a passport problem and claiming to have a hand grenade took Archbishop Patrick Flores hostage in his office for nine hours before releasing him Wednesday evening.

The Roman Catholic archbishop appeared to be unharmed as he was escorted out of his office by police and placed on a stretcher.

The suspect was led out in handcuffs.

Gabriel Trevino, a police department spokesman, said police had been negotiating with the suspect through the day, and said negotiator could hear Flores in the background while they talked to the suspect.

The archbishop's secretary, Myrtle Sanchez, was also held for about three hours but was freed unharmed.

She said the man had been holding something in his hand that she believed to be a weapon but she could not identify it, said Monsignor Larry Stuebben, who spoke to her shortly after she was released. She described the man as upset but not out of control.

"He's very frustrated by the way he's been treated, and wants the archbishop to help him," Stuebben said Sanchez told him.

The man is believed to be from El Salvador, has been in the United States about 25 years and has three children. His wife and one son were at the scene, Stuebben said. It was unknown if the man was in the United States illegally.

He entered the office about 10 a.m. local time.

Richard Yzaguirre, general manager of Catholic Television, a service run by the archdiocese, said the Spanish-speaking man, in his 30s, asked for help with a passport problem. He seemed calm and was respectful to Flores, but the man "was pretty insistent he wanted him to help him with this problem," Yzaguirre said.

"I could tell the archbishop was kind of caught off guard."

The chancery is the headquarters for the 23-county San Antonio archdiocese. Flores, 70, became the first Mexican-American Catholic bishop in the nation when he was named its auxiliary bishop.

Before Flores' release, as many as 50 law-enforcement officers — FBI hostage negotiators, SWAT officers and others — were at the scene as a crowd of more than 100 gathered outside the Catholic chancery in 90-degree weather and prayed. About 100 chancery employees had to be evacuated.

"Archbishop Flores is one of the prominent leaders in this city who will speak for peace. I don't know of any concerted effort to do damage to him," said Monsignor Terence Nolan, chancellor of the diocese.

David Garcia, rector of San Fernando Cathedral, said Flores, though a native Texan, is known as a friend to immigrants. He also was known to have an open-door policy.

"I can't think of a person who has more tried to help people with immigration problems than the archbishop has," Garcia said.

Kenneth Thompson, executive director of the San Antonio Community of Churches, said: "He has taken hostage the man who probably cares the most and is most willing to listen. One of his known strengths is his ability to stay quiet and to listen. He is a humble person, and he is willing to sit there and listen to you."

Campaign finance reforms also issue in Kansas politics

By LIBBY QUAID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Federal campaign finance reforms pushed by Rep. Dennis Moore, D-Kan., have begun moving swiftly through Congress, and the issue's role is growing in Kansas politics, too.

Passed by the House early Wednesday on a 385-39 vote, the measure would force popular but secretive political groups to disclose who is paying for their television "issue" ads and other activities. Senate Republican leaders have fought the measure, but said Wednesday they have agreed to a quick vote on the bill, probably after the July 4th holiday.

"I felt so good about this — it's one of the rare instances when we try to put aside party politics and come together to do the right thing," said Moore, who as author of similar legislation helped lead this effort to passage.

"This shines the light of disclosure on these 'stealth PACs' so people will know who is trying to influence their votes and who is trying to influence their elections."

The House bill requires disclosure of groups that organize under the tax code's section 527, which allows nonprofit groups to run campaign-style commercials that do not directly advocate a candidate's election or defeat.

The bill closes loopholes that conceal contributors of huge, unregulated sums and sponsors of anonymous attack ads.

Groups targeted by the measure are already active in Moore's heavily Republican 3rd Congressional District, which includes Kansas City, Kan., and surrounding areas.

Senators already have approved similar legislation, and passage of the House version would send the measure to President Clinton, who is ready to sign it. It would take effect immediately, in advance of the November elections.

The 39 opponents, all Republicans, included two fellow Kansans, Reps. Todd Tiahrt and Jim Ryun.

Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., voted for the bill.

Coffee/Sweet Shop newest addition to Union

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students in need of a coffee break now have a new place to go in the K-State Student Union.

The Coffee/Sweet Shop, on the first floor near the Union Food Court, opened Wednesday morning, offering a variety of flavored coffees and specialty foods.

The store has a variety of Starbucks coffee products available, including cappuccino and espresso.

It also offers Island Oasis smoothies and foods ranging from danishes to cheesecake to cookies.

During the shop's summer hours, from 7 to 11 a.m., it mainly offers breakfast specialty items such as sticky pecan cinnamon rolls and donuts.

During the 2000-2001 school year, it also will offer specialty sandwiches and salads, said Brian Grove, associate director of the Union Food Service and executive chef.

"Right now we're addressing the morning and late-morning crowd," he said. "But when all the students are back, and we change our hours, we'll offer specialty sandwiches and salads."

Grove said having the specialty store is an advantage for many students.

"It basically gives an area for students and staff to have a cup of coffee or a snack without having to utilize the bigger areas such as the food court," Grove said. "And, it's a destination that has products not offered in the food court."

Grove said he believes the store eventually will become a place where students hang out or study, and that the open design of it gives it a nice look.

"Everybody has positive attitudes about it," June Stone, store manager, said. "It's really nice and the atmosphere is good."

Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said she was pleased with the morning's turnout.

"We've had quite a few people come by this morning and check out the menu," she said. "As time goes, we're going to try to encourage more events, such as poetry readings, in that area."

She said they are optimistic of the business's success as the majority of students return.

"As the fall semester begins and we get the majority of the student body back, we hope they visit that area and take full advantage of it."

In September, there will be a naming contest in order to give students a chance to name the store.

Grove said though it hasn't been confirmed, the store hours during the school year will probably be from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Gay former scout says ruling will harm organization

Kevyn Jacobs used to be a Boy Scout.

Jacobs, who attended K-State from spring 1995 to fall 1999, said that as a homosexual, he never felt comfortable during his three years as a Boy Scout or even as a Cub Scout. Not openly gay at the time, he never spoke out.

"I am openly gay now," he said. "But, I wasn't at the time. I'm kind of a sissy boy, and I was made to feel very uncomfortable at the Boy Scouts."

"I was poked fun at and made fun of for being a sissy boy, but I guess that will happen — boys will be boys. But, now they are saying that is OK, which I think is wrong, very wrong."

Wednesday's 5-4 Supreme Court decision ruled that the Boy Scouts of America can bar homosexuals from serving as troop leaders, sparking much controversy. The Court ruled the Boy Scouts of America is a private-sector organization — therefore banning homosexuals is permitted.

"If (the Boy Scouts of America) are going to present themselves as the Supreme Court advocated them as, as a private sector, then this is going to have some unintended consequences."

Ed Weisshaar, Boy Scout executive for 32 counties in North Central and Northwest Kansas, said he agrees with the Court's decision.

"The Boy Scouts of America have been dealing with this issue for 20 years now, and we believe the right decision was made, naturally," Weisshaar said. "We aren't judging their lifestyle, but we're saying we have the right to choose our leaders, and the Supreme Court upheld that."

"I don't believe it is discrimination, and the Boy Scouts of America don't think it was discrimination, and the highest court in the land said it's not discrimination," he said.

Jacobs said he feels differently. "It's interesting that the Girl Scouts don't discriminate, and neither do the Boy Scouts in other countries, but the Boy Scouts of America do," he said.

Most countries do not ban homosexuals or non-Christians from belonging to their Boy Scout organizations, including England, where the Boy Scouts were founded.

"It's really sad that the Boy Scouts of America have been hijacked by religious conservatives and made into something it shouldn't be. This is not the Boy Scouts that I knew and loved as a kid that taught me so much," Jacobs said.

Weisshaar said he has never encountered a homosexuality case while involved with the Boy Scouts, but encountered a case with an atheist scout leader, who was eventually banned from the Boy Scouts.

Both homosexuality and atheism stray from the Boy Scout oath, requiring scouts to be "morally straight," and to do their "duty to God," Weisshaar said.

"Isn't it ironic Girl Scouts in America and other Boy Scouts don't feel the same way?" Jacobs said. "My answer to this is fine. If they want to be a private group, then fine. Don't expect to use public facilities and public money."

Jacobs said gay boys need the same opportunities as heterosexual ones.

"This ruling doesn't just apply to gay scout leaders," he said. "Gay boys need leadership that the Boy Scouts provide. This is a very betrayal of the values the Boy Scouts tried to teach us."

Court says Scouts can ban gay leaders from organization

By LAURIE ASSEO

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Boy Scouts can bar homosexuals from serving as troop leaders, the Supreme Court said Wednesday in a 5-4 decision on free-association rights that might also let the 6.2 million-member organization reject gay boys as members.

Forcing the Scouts to accept gay troop leaders would violate the organization's right of "expressive association" under the Constitution's First Amendment, the justices ruled on the last day of their 1999-2000 term.

"The Boy Scouts asserts that homosexual conduct is inconsistent with the values it seeks to instill," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court.

Requiring the organization to have a gay scoutmaster would force it "to send a message, both to the youth members and the world, that the Boy Scouts accepts homosexual conduct as a legitimate form of behavior," the chief justice said.

"We're very pleased," said Scouts spokesman Gregg Shields. "It's going to allow us to continue our mission of providing character-building programs for youth."

But the New Jersey assistant scoutmaster ousted when the organization learned he is gay expressed dismay at the ruling.

"I'm definitely saddened by the decision," said James Dale. "People don't join the Boy Scouts because they're anti-gay. People join the Boy Scouts because they want acceptance, they want community."

Supreme Court rules against 'partial-birth' abortion ban

By RICHARD CARELLI

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A sharply divided Supreme Court on Wednesday struck down a state law banning "partial-birth" abortions — a decision sure to escalate a bitter national debate that has raged ever since the landmark Roe v. Wade ruling in 1973.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices said the Nebraska law violates women's constitutional rights by imposing an "undue burden" on their decisions to end their pregnancies.

The ruling, the court's most important word on abortion in eight years, did not appear to immediately affect similar laws in 29 other states. But their supporters are likely to have a harder time defending them in lower courts.

Partial-birth abortion is not a medical term. Doctors call the method dilation and extraction, or D&X, because it involves partially extracting a fetus, legs first, through the birth canal, cutting the skull and draining its contents.

A more common procedure is dilation and evacuation, or D&E, in which an arm or leg of a live fetus may be pulled into the birth canal during the abortion operation.

The court said the Nebraska law, which state Attorney General Don Stenberg said is aimed only at the D&X method, could criminalize the D&E method as well.

"Using this law, some present prosecutors and future attorneys general may choose to pursue physicians who use D&E procedures, the most commonly used method for performing pre-viability second-trimester abortions," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote for the court.

"All those who perform abortion procedures using that method must fear prosecution, conviction and imprisonment. The result is an undue burden upon a woman's right to make an abortion decision," Breyer said. "We must consequently find the statute unconstitutional."

The Nebraska law made it a crime if someone performing an abortion "partially delivers vaginally a living unborn child before killing the unborn child and completing the delivery."

President Clinton, asked at a White House news conference about the ruling, said, "I think the court decision was the only decision that could be reached consistent with Roe v. Wade." He said the next president is likely to choose two to four Supreme Court justices and "depending on who they are," abortion rights are "very much in the balance."

Bob Blank, president of Metro Right to Life, an abortion opponent group in Omaha, Neb., was disappointed by the ruling. "The Supreme Court of the United States chose not to listen to the people of the United States," he said.

The Nebraska law did not allow partial-birth abortions even if doctors considered that method the best way to guard a woman's health.

Joining Breyer were Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, David H. Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

Ginsburg and Breyer joined the court after a 1992 decision in which the justices then on the court upheld the constitutional right to abortion by a 5-4 vote. Wednesday's ruling was the first on abortion for those two justices.

Chief Justice William H.

Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia, Clarence Thomas and Anthony M. Kennedy dissented.

Kennedy was one of the co-authors of a 1992 Supreme Court decision that upheld the constitutional right to abortion. O'Connor and Souter were the other co-authors.

O'Connor, who supplied the critical fifth vote for striking down Nebraska's law, wrote a concurring opinion that said some version of a partial-birth abortion law might be constitutional.

"A ban on partial-birth abortion that only proscribed the D&X method of abortion and that included an exception to preserve the life and health of the mother would be constitutional in my view," she said.

The procedure at issue in the Nebraska case is used for some abortions close to the point of viability, when a fetus is able to live outside the uterus. Past abortion rulings make clear that states can take numerous steps to protect fetal life once viability occurs, generally around the sixth month of pregnancy.

When the case was argued in April, a lawyer representing a

Nebraska doctor told the court that the state's law was "so broadly written it could prohibit most second-trimester abortions."

The debate over partial-birth abortion already has inserted itself into presidential politics. The Clinton administration supported striking down Nebraska's law, and the president twice vetoed similar federal laws enacted by Congress.

In the presidential race, Democrat Al Gore opposes bans on partial-birth abortion, but Republican George W. Bush supports them.

The Republican-controlled House voted 287-141 in April to outlaw partial-birth abortions — the third time in five years it backed such a ban. While the majority was wide enough to override Clinton's promised veto, the bill's supporters again appear to lack the two-thirds majority they would need to prevail in the Senate.

Nebraska's law, along with those in Arkansas and Iowa, was invalidated by a federal appeals court last year. But another federal appeals court upheld partial-birth abortion laws in Wisconsin and Illinois.

Supreme Court rules against 'partial-birth' abortion ban

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A sharply divided Supreme Court on Wednesday struck down a state law banning "partial-birth" abortions — a decision sure to escalate a bitter national debate that has raged ever since the landmark Roe v. Wade ruling in 1973.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices said the Nebraska law violates women's constitutional rights by imposing an "undue burden" on their decisions to end their pregnancies.

The ruling, the court's most important word on abortion in eight years, did not appear to immediately affect similar laws in 29 other states. But their supporters are likely to have a harder time defending them in lower courts.

Partial-birth abortion is not a medical term. Doctors call the method dilation and extraction, or D&X, because it involves partially extracting a fetus, legs first, through the birth canal, cutting the skull and draining its contents.

A more common procedure is dilation and evacuation, or D&E, in which an arm or leg of a live fetus may be pulled into the birth canal during the abortion operation.

The court said the Nebraska law, which state Attorney General Don Stenberg said is aimed only at the D&X method, could criminalize the D&E method as well.

"Using this law, some present prosecutors and future attorneys general may choose to pursue physicians who use D&E procedures, the most commonly used method for performing pre-viability second-trimester abortions," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote for the court.

"All those who perform abortion procedures using that method must fear prosecution, conviction and imprisonment. The result is an undue burden upon a woman's right to make an abortion decision," Breyer said. "We must consequently find the statute unconstitutional."

The Nebraska law made it a crime if someone performing an abortion "partially delivers vaginally a living unborn child before killing the unborn child and completing the delivery."

President Clinton, asked at a White House news conference about the ruling, said, "I think the court decision was the only decision that could be reached consistent with Roe v. Wade." He said the next president is likely to choose two to four Supreme Court justices and "depending on who they are," abortion rights are "very much in the balance."

Bob Blank, president of Metro Right to Life, an abortion opponent group in Omaha, Neb., was disappointed by the ruling. "The Supreme Court of the United States chose not to listen to the people of the United States," he said.

The Nebraska law did not allow partial-birth abortions even if doctors considered that method the best way to guard a woman's health.

Joining Breyer were Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, David H. Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

Ginsburg and Breyer joined the court after a 1992 decision in which the justices then on the court upheld the constitutional right to abortion by a 5-4 vote. Wednesday's ruling was the first on abortion for those two justices.

Chief Justice William H.

Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia, Clarence Thomas and Anthony M. Kennedy dissented.

Kennedy was one of the co-authors of a 1992 Supreme Court decision that upheld the constitutional right to abortion. O'Connor and Souter were the other co-authors.

O'Connor, who supplied the critical fifth vote for striking down Nebraska's law, wrote a concurring opinion that said some version of a partial-birth abortion law might be constitutional.

"A ban on partial-birth abortion that only proscribed the D&X method of abortion and that included an exception to preserve the life and health of the mother would be constitutional in my view," she said.

The procedure at issue in the Nebraska case is used for some abortions close to the point of viability, when a fetus is able to live outside the uterus. Past abortion rulings make clear that states can take numerous steps to protect fetal life once viability occurs, generally around the sixth month of pregnancy.

When the case was argued in April, a lawyer representing a

Nebraska doctor told the court that the state's law was "so broadly written it could prohibit most second-trimester abortions."

The debate over partial-birth abortion already has inserted itself into presidential politics. The Clinton administration supported striking down Nebraska's law, and the president twice vetoed similar federal laws enacted by Congress.

In the presidential race, Democrat Al Gore opposes bans on partial-birth abortion, but Republican George W. Bush supports them.

The Republican-controlled House voted 287-141 in April to outlaw partial-birth abortions — the third time in five years it backed such a ban. While the majority was wide enough to override Clinton's promised veto, the bill's supporters again appear to lack the two-thirds majority they would need to prevail in the Senate.

Nebraska's law, along with those in Arkansas and Iowa, was invalidated by a federal appeals court last year. But another federal appeals court upheld partial-birth abortion laws in Wisconsin and Illinois.

Crop Concerns

Droughts, low moisture cause farmers problems

By DANICA COTO

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It happened to him twice. The first time was in 1993, during the floods, and again in 1996, during what he called a unique hailstorm.

But Duane Hund, farmer and extension farm analyst, said he depended on his other crops to pull him through.

"You tighten your belt another notch and figure out how to get by," he said.

It's pretty rare when all the crops turn out bad, Hund said.

However, farmers this year don't have much to worry about, said Kevin Dhuyvetter, extension agriculture economist.

"I think we're a long way off to say we're having a crop failure in Kansas," he said.

Some people might think this is a bad year, but this is a normal year, he said.

There also has been a decrease in prices, but hopefully with government elections coming up, farmers will get money, he said.

The crop yields have been consistent in the past five years, Hund said, although there is less wheat being grown four years because of less moisture and less profit.

Moisture plays an essential part in the aftermath of a crop failure.

Farmers might choose to plant a second crop behind wheat, such as sunflowers or milo, Dhuyvetter said.

Before farmers tear up the failed crop and plant a new one, they make sure there will be enough moisture.

Some parts of Kansas are looking at crop failure, but there have been extremely low yields that have been harvested, said Dale Fjell, extension crop product specialist.

When farmers have opted to have a second crop, they choose either corn, sorghum or soybeans, which grow better.

"You expect to get a yield for input and profit," Fjell said.

However, there also are critical times during those crops' growth where moisture is essential.

"We're a long way off to say we're having a crop failure in Kansas."

— Kevin Dhuyvetter extension agriculture economist

Corn, which has potential to pay more per bushel, is the riskiest crop, because it requires moisture for silking, and soybeans require moisture during flowering and pod-filling time.

Wheat is least risky because it has a long growing season.

Fjell said farmers take the information into account, along with the amount of moisture and equipment they have when choosing to grow a crop.

K-State also is affected by a crop failure, Dhuyvetter said.

When farmers' bushels are harvested and sold, there is a check-off program that takes the money and uses it for marketing enhancement and research, he said.

K-State applies for research grants with this money.

If there's not a lot of money, the research program isn't developed and sometimes graduate students are turned down due to a lack of funds, he said.

This year's been good, Hund said.

"When I've talked to farmers, they tell me they're amazed at how well their crops turned out despite the drought," he said.

The threat of a crop failure due to drought was deterred in part with the recent rain in Riley County.

"I don't know if you can call it the million-dollar rain, but it probably was," Dhuyvetter said.

Early harvest has little effect on prices

By DANICA COTO

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People might remember the price of cereal or bread being less expensive last week at the grocery store.

But it's not the changes going on in farms that's causing a rise in prices — it might have to do with the marketing of a product, said Scott Staggenborg, agriculture extension specialist.

"If you talk to farmers, they kind of question if it has any impact on consumers because they don't see prices change," he said.

There is also an early harvest this summer, but this won't affect consumers much, said Duane Hund, extension farm analyst.

The early harvest might have a slight effect on seasonal prices, with wheat prices decreasing in July instead of August, said Kevin Dhuyvetter, extension agriculture economist.

"I know it's definitely earlier than normal," he said.

This occurrence favors farmers who have the opportunity to plant a second crop, Staggenborg said.

"It's not a very widespread practice," he said. "Input costs are low, and many times they break even. It's more of an opportunity."

Dale Fjell, extension crop product specialist, said he agreed.

Money isn't a big factor, he said.

"It's kind of risky, but it gives an opportunity for the farmer to harvest two crops in one year," Fjell said.

The prices of commodities are at or below government loan rates, Hund said.

"Those farms that didn't get enrolled in the 1996 program are not allowed to receive the difference," he said.

Meanwhile, though, farmers who harvest early can consider that second crop.

Weather plays important role in crop success

By DANICA COTO

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some watch it because there's a commercial break on another channel.

But farmers follow The Weather Channel to see into their future.

This year, some crops will be affected by the Midwest drought.

Rainfall deficits started last July, and there have been below normal rainfalls ever since, said Mary Knapp, state climatologist.

"It's kind of difficult to call it the worst drought," she said. "You need to look at the intensity and length."

One of the worst droughts in recent history was in 1988 and 1989, and also in the winter of 1996.

Because Kansas winters are usually dry and this spring was also dry, it has affected farmers, Knapp said.

Between 60 and 70 percent of yield potential is determined by the timing of rains, said Daryl Buchholz, assistant director for agriculture extension.

"A bigger issue for a lot of farmers is the condition of stock ponds and water sources," he said.

Some farmers have been known to haul water or to open fences and allow livestock to get to water sources during droughts, he said.

The driest parts of the state are north and east of Riley County, in places such as Seneca and Hiawatha.

However, not all of Kansas has been affected.

"The western part of Kansas alleviated those problems because they can't depend on consistent rainfall," Buchholz said. "We live knowing we can depend on rainfall."

In some areas, farmers supplement their water sources with an irrigation system, especially in north central and northeastern Kansas, said Kevin Dhuyvetter, extension agriculture economist.

One of the biggest actions farmers can take to protect themselves is to buy crop insurance in advance.

"It's not like I can look out the window and say, wow, my crops are looking dry and hot, I should get some insurance," Dhuyvetter said.

Duane Hund, extension farm analyst, said he agreed.

"Farmers have to make the decision well in advance," he said. "As a general rule, farmers may tend to increase level of coverage ... if there's a dry spring."

Those with livestock, however, might try to pre-purchase seed if they know a drought is coming, Dhuyvetter said.

Although there's not much a farmer can do once the drought starts, there are certain precautions that can be taken, he said.

Farmers till less so their soil won't lose so much moisture. In addition, Dhuyvetter said farmers should make sure they control insects and weeds regardless of how dry or damaged their crops are.

Farmers can contact a financial farm analyst from K-State to help figure their costs, he said.

"If it's a major drought and it affects a lot of people ... a lot of times there would be drought relief," Dhuyvetter said.

Buchholz said farmers work in the risk environment of being either too wet or too dry all the time — one of the reasons Hund said he is always prepared.

"I buy insurance because, sure enough, that year you decide you know more than the weatherman, it ends up that you need it," he said.

Fitness Facts

We are told time and again that exercise is important. The question is why? Exercise has been found to help with disease prevention, improve stamina, strengthen and tone muscle, bones and ligaments, enhance flexibility, control weight, and most importantly to improve one's quality of life. When put in those terms, why would someone not want to exercise?

Nutrition Notes

Protein is a vital part of a normal diet, but the average American consumes more in their diet than necessary. Approximately 20% of total daily calories should come from protein. Two to three servings will meet the daily requirements of most adults. The recommended serving sizes are 2-3 oz of cooked lean meat, poultry, or fish (the size of a deck of playing cards). A 1/2 cup serving of dry beans, 1 egg or 2 tablespoons of peanut butter also count. Too much protein can put strain on the kidneys or cause excessive saturated fat or cholesterol intake.

Pool Action

Come enjoy the fun this summer at the Natatorium. There's something for everyone with three pools available for lap swimming, recreating, water jogging, water aerobics, and sunning on the deck. Make a splash to stay in shape and have fun in July!

Candidate decides to cancel fund-raiser with gun prizes

SALLISAW, Okla. — A congressional candidate who had planned to give away guns as prizes at a campaign fund-raiser Friday decided to call off the banquet instead.

Mark Detto, who is seeking the Republican nomination for the House seat being vacated by GOP Rep. Tom Coburn, said the Oklahoma Republican Party had recommended several times that he abandon the plan.

Parts of Colorado, Wyoming still consumed by 2 wildfires

CRAIG, Colo. — Firefighters were bracing for strong winds and waiting for reinforcements Tuesday as they tried to stop two Western Slope wildfires from spreading.

The larger blaze started Monday at the Dinosaur National Monument in remote northwestern Colorado, and was burning on nearly 8,300 acres about 5 miles from the Utah border, said Lynn Barclay, Craig Interagency Dispatch center spokesperson.

Firefighters were expecting to be challenged by strong afternoon winds with gusts up to 35 mph, and were taking advantage of calmer morning weather to drop retardant and water from an air tanker and a helicopter.

The blaze was burning mostly on federal land, and no structures were immediately threatened, Barclay said.

Despite surging economy, Hispanics in low-wage jobs

SAN DIEGO — While the booming economy provided a lift for many American workers, Hispanics earned half what whites did in 1998, with many stuck in low-paying jobs that offered little promise of advancement, said a report released Tuesday by a Hispanic group.

Researchers said the income disparities detailed in the report could have troubling consequences because Hispanics are expected to form a greater share of the nation's work force in coming years.

A growing but poorer work force could hurt the nation's ability to compete globally and fund government programs such as Social Security, said Sonia Perez, a labor researcher for the National Conference of La Raza and editor of the 230-page report.

"This isn't about being nice to Latino people. This is about America's future and our best interests as a nation," Perez said.

The report was released at La Raza's annual conference.

8 fans killed, 25 others hurt at Pearl Jam concert Friday

ROSKILDE, Denmark — The Pearl Jam concert was raging as 50,000 young fans danced and sang — "things were really great," one concertgoer said.

But then fans caught up in the enthusiasm began pushing forward, leaving some up front screaming and climbing on top of each other to get air. By the time Friday night's crush at the Roskilde festival subsided, eight fans were trampled to death and 25 more were injured.

On Saturday, only hours later, the main stage here was starkly silent as knots of concertgoers gazed at flowers covering the muddy ground where their fellow fans died.

"This is so painful," Pearl Jam said in a statement. "I think we are all waiting for someone to wake us and say it was just a horrible nightmare. There are absolutely no words to express our anguish in regard to the parents and loved ones of those precious lives that were lost."

The popular Seattle-based band canceled its July 2 and July 3 concerts, according to its official Web site. The shows had been scheduled for Werchter, Belgium, and Rotterdam, the Netherlands.

From local track star to Olympic trial qualifier, K-State sophomore focuses on upcoming season

By JASON NICOL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's track and field and cross country phenomenon Amy Mortimer is adjusting well to life in the limelight.

From being recognized at the grocery store by complete strangers to having a constant stream of stories in the local media, she quickly has become one of Manhattan's star athletes.

The sophomore from Riley County High School spent her freshman year establishing herself as one of the premier distance runners in the Big 12 and the nation. She was tabbed as an NCAA All-American in cross country and track, voted Big 12 female freshman performer of the year, Big 12 outdoor champion in the 5,000 meters and qualified for this month's U.S. Olympic Trials in the 1,500 meters.

While Mortimer says being a focus of the community is difficult, she has dealt with the renown the same way she approaches a race — by taking it in stride.

Always a team player, Mortimer says she is happy with her successes not only for herself, but for her teammates as well.

"I'm grateful for everything," she said. "It's nice to share it with my teammates."

With responsibility to her team and K-State in mind, Mortimer recently made one of the most difficult choices she has had to face since starting college — put off training for the upcoming cross country season and prepare for the Olympic trials, or take a little time off and head into the cross country season refreshed and ready to run.

Mortimer chose not to participate at the Olympic trials. Putting her team before herself, she said she decided her teammates were more important than individual rewards. Mortimer also said it was the wrong time to try for a spot on the U.S. Olympic team.

While many people might be surprised that anyone would pass up an opportunity to represent their country at the Olympics, Mortimer handled the decision like a seasoned veteran.

"I really wanted to do it, because it is the Olympic trials," she said. "I started to get burned out, though."

The last thing Mortimer said she wanted to fight this summer was burnout from all of the events and practice she has participated in over the last year.

When she no longer looked forward to racing at the trials, she knew this was not the time to take a shot at making the Olympics.

"I looked at it, and decided that I was dreading it," she said. "It wasn't going to be fun anymore."

More than that, though, Mortimer said she wants to make sure she is ready for K-State's upcoming cross country season.

However, fans should not be discouraged by her decision to not pursue a place on this year's Olympic team. Mortimer said she will try for a spot at the 2004 games.

"I hope to be in it in four years," she said. "I plan to continue running after college."

By all indications, she should have a pretty good chance at making the Olympic team.

"I want to continue improving over the next four years," Mortimer said.

Men's basketball player leaves team for team-policy violation

K-State men's basketball sophomore Kenyatta Dix will not be returning to the team this fall, head coach Jim Wooldridge announced Friday through a release by K-State Sports Information.

The 6-foot-1-inch guard from Florida averaged 4.0 points, 1.3 assists and 11.5 minutes per game last season. His highest total of the year was 22 points opposite Missouri on Feb. 19.

According to Wooldridge and Sports Information, Dix is leaving because of a violation of team policy. The release did not elaborate on the rules violation, but did say that Dix's scholarship was not going to be renewed for the 2000-2001 season.

"We would like to wish Kenyatta the best of luck in his future endeavors," Wooldridge said in the release. "He is a talented young man, and it is unfortunate that he will not be a part of Kansas State basketball in the future."

K-State women's golfer 1st in history to qualify for U.S. Open

K-State sophomore golfer Miranda Smith became the first women's golfer in school history to qualify for the U.S. Open, Sports Information announced Thursday.

Smith qualified for the Open during a June 26 tournament after posting a 3-over-par 75.

Smith out fought several LPGA members in a playoff to earn the spot at the Open and is excited about playing in a LPGA major event.

"There are no words to describe the feelings," Smith said. "I went into the event hoping to shoot a good score. Right now it is a privilege to practice for such a prestigious event like the Open."

This year's U.S. Women's Open will be at the Merit Club in Gurnee, Ill., July 20-23 and will be televised on ESPN and NBC.

Tex Winter signs more than 200 copies of biography

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"I only expected about 10 people to show up," Tex Winter jokingly said as he signed more than 200 copies of his new biography.

Winter, K-State men's basketball coach in the 1950s and '60s, was on hand Monday in the K-State Student Union to sign "Trial by Basketball: The Life and Times of Tex Winter."

He said the reason he had a book written about his life was to inspire elderly people.

"I guess that my seniority, and the fact that I've coached for 54 years, was why," Winter said.

Mark Bender, the book's author, said the opportunity to write about Winter was great.

"We look to write about Americans who are a little bit outside of the spotlight, but are still doing tremendous things," Bender said. "We were thrilled to sign on with Coach Tex Winter to do his biography."

Winter, who has family around Manhattan, said he enjoys coming back despite his hectic schedule.

The coach who guided K-State to the Final Four in 1958 and 1964 is now an assistant coach with the Los Angeles Lakers.

"This is a hurried trip for me," Winter said. "We're starting rookie camp on July 7."

Winter and the Lakers are coming off their NBA championship of less than a month ago. The championship was Winter's first with the Lakers, but seventh overall, after winning six in the 1990s Chicago Bulls.

Winter said this championship was a little unexpected.

"This came as more of a surprise," Winter said. "We didn't expect to win it. It was very gratifying."

"You have to be good, but being good in itself is not enough if you're not lucky," he said. "But being lucky isn't good if you're not good."

Despite the success he has enjoyed throughout his coaching career, Winter said the end is near.

"I haven't decided yet, but I can't see more than two years and maybe none," Winter said.

New aid applications include inquiry into applicants' past drug convictions

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students filling out a Free Application for Federal Student Aid application might notice one change. As of Saturday, students filling out the form must write down if they have had an illegal drug conviction.

The change is to further ensure that students who have a drug conviction are not receiving financial aid they should not be, said Robert Gamez, associate director of student financial assistance.

The degree of the student's conviction and how many offenses occurred determine when or if a student can receive aid. Prior to the 2000-2001 FAFSA, students were not required to say if they had been convicted.

The aid applications were solely processed through a database containing names of convicted students. Some students, however, can have a drug conviction and not be in the database. If a judge ruled the student could not receive federal aid, the student is entered into the database. If the judge didn't specify a restriction on aid, the student is not entered.

"The database has always been there, and still is in place, but it is at the discretion of the judge," Gamez said. "This is designed to catch a few more people."

Students who have been convicted of either the possession of an illegal substance or the sale of an illegal substance will be entered as a two or three.

Entering a two signifies the student will be eligible for aid sometime during that school year, and a three means the student has lost eligibility.

Gamez said the application has a toll-free number and a Web address for students to figure out which number applies to them.

The change on the form was decided after financial aid rules were evaluated, a part of the 1965 Higher Education Act. Every couple of years, the rules are reauthorized. During 1998's reevaluation, Congress decided the illegal drug conviction question would be added.

"When Congress was looking at reauthorization, there was a well-reasoned concern that individuals receiving federal assistance have been convicted of drug sales or possession," Gamez said. "They want to make sure they are spending money on people that want to go to school, and not on people that have been convicted of drug sales or possession."

He said they are relying on students' honesty in filling out the question, just as they do on the rest of the form.

"We really don't see ourselves as the role of the police," Gamez said. "It's possible that students and family could lie and put down fraudulent information, but the Office of the Inspector General inspects any cases that may be fraudulent."

Students and family caught giving false information can be fined up to $10,000, be sent to jail or both, Gamez said.

"I think most people are truthful and honest when they fill it out," he said. "I think they take it pretty seriously, which is how they should take it."

Area residents celebrate 4th of July at CiCo Park

By TRACY DOILE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A shade tree and a lawn chair offered rest for Marie Dellen on Tuesday afternoon at CiCo Park, the site of Thunder Over Manhattan.

Thunder Over Manhattan, a community event sponsored by the Westside Business Association, began at 7:30 a.m., before Dellen needed the coolness of the shade tree. A 5K run and two-mile fun walk kicked off the day's activities. Dellen, member of the Westside Business Association, said the race involved 165 runners and that when Thunder Over Manhattan began, it used to only have this race. Now, five years later, it has grown into a day full of activities that end with a fireworks display.

The Solar Kiwanis put on a pancake feed from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. A Patriot Parade at 9:30 a.m. for children 6 and younger produced decorated bikes, tricycles and people in red, white and blue.

By evening, the park filled up with even more activities for children, including horseback riding, face painting, displays by Sunset Zoological Park and Fort Riley, duck ponds, a dunk tank, tricycle races, a bean-bag toss and a pedal-power pull for 4- to 12-year-olds.

The beauty of Thunder Over Manhattan, besides its range of activities, is the cost, or lack thereof, Dellen said.

"Games are done by donations of business people here on the west side," she said. "The only thing that families have to spend money on is food. Even the pool is open for free from 1 to 8 p.m."

Half a dozen food vendors fed the crowd of nearly 10,000.

One of those vendors was Cud's Country BBQ, owned by Bob and Ronda Cudney of Marysville, Kan.

"There are standard barbecue weekends — Memorial Day,

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — In business suits, saris and checked sundresses, 84 people from 27 countries stood on the steps of Monticello on Tuesday and became U.S. citizens.

The new Americans who took the oath of citizenship during the annual Independence Day ceremony at Thomas Jefferson's home included a Bolivian fisherman, an educator from Pakistan and a Chinese biologist, among others.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who spoke at the ceremony, said they reminded her of the fears she felt when she came to the United States from Czechoslovakia at age 11.

"It never occurred to me that I would be secretary of state and have Thomas Jefferson's job," Albright told the crowd of about 1,500.

Elsewhere around the country there were parades, picnics, games and, of course, fireworks to mark the anniversary of America's independence.

In cloudy Seattle, people were in jackets, carrying umbrellas.

"Generally, summer doesn't usually start around here until July 12," said Kirsten Willman, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

"It was like 85 last week, but you can't let the weather get you down around here," said Kevin Jackson, 35, of Seattle, who was at Gas Works Park with his wife and 2-year-old daughter.

Across the country in Boston, a small group of Hawaiians mourned the loss of their islands' independence. Blowing conch shell horns, about two dozen native Hawaiians and their supporters gathered where American colonists threw British tea into the Boston Harbor in 1773 to protest colonial rule. The Hawaiians threw garlands of the Hawaiian plant ti — also pronounced "tea" — into the harbor.

Union considers linking bonuses, salary to teachers' performance

By ANJETTA McQUEEN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — What if a teacher got docked every time a child brought home a "D," or perhaps the principal's favorite received a $2,000 bonus? Such possibilities make teachers wary of linking their pay to performance instead of seniority.

But as a teachers' union meeting in Chicago began reconsidering long-time resistance to bonus systems, another union reported Tuesday from Philadelphia that teachers still get paid much less than other professionals.

"The teaching profession often isn't even in the horse race," Sandra Feldman, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said at a news conference in Philadelphia.

In the 1998-99 school year, the average teacher made $40,574, the AFT said in its annual salary report.

New Jersey teachers had the highest average pay, $51,692, while South Dakota had the lowest, $28,386. In New York, the average pay was $49,686, up 2 percent from 1997-98; California averaged $46,326, up 3.9 percent; Texas, $34,448, up 2.5 percent.

The union contrasted teachers' pay with that of other white-collar jobs including engineers at $68,294 on average and computer systems analysts, $66,782. The AFT represents less than half of the nation's 3.1 million teachers, but surveyed state departments of education for its report released at its biennial meeting.

The pay disparity between teachers and other professions has fueled the debate over linking teacher pay to performance. In Chicago at the annual meeting of the AFT's larger rival, the National Education Association is slated to vote today on how to handle bonus plans when its members bargain with school districts. The NEA, historically against pay for performance, examined its policy — concluding it might at least help local units do the research needed to decide whether to accept a plan in a contract.

A handful of states offer rewards used for computers or training, not teacher pay. But recent demands by business leaders and politicians for higher standards often are accompanied by calls for teacher cash incentives.

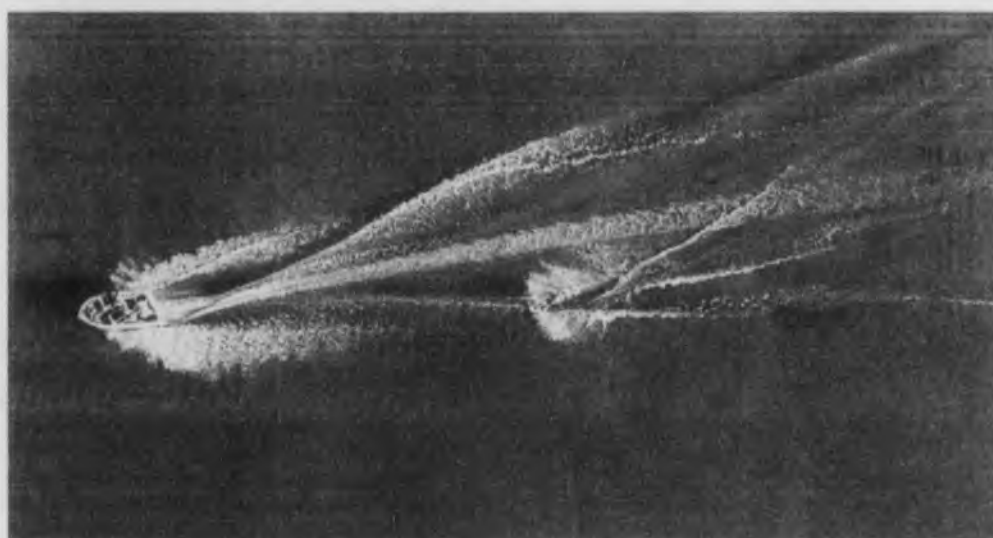

Such plans mean teachers get higher salaries or bonuses if they're judged to be good at what they do, accept extra or difficult assignments, mentor others on how to become more effective, or more controversially, have students who score higher on tests.

Performance-pay supporters blame salary gaps with other professions on unions — which usually negotiate members' salaries based on how many years they've spent in the classroom or whether they have a masters' degree.

"Engineers and computer scientists who cannot do the job are usually let go, while the successful ones earn high salaries," said Lissette Bishins, a spokeswoman for the Center for Education Reform. "This is not the case for teachers."

John McDonald, a Dearborn, Mich., college professor and local president of organized higher-education faculty there, said contracts are designed to help workers, not hurt schools.

Some local chapters of both unions have abandoned or scaled down pay based on seniority in cities such as Denver. Cincinnati made history last month when it became the first public district to replace its pay-by-seniority scale with pay based on performance. That system is far from simple. Teachers would be rated in 16 different areas, every five years, by a principal and an advanced teacher, then placed into five categories and paid accordingly, from $30,000 to $62,500.

KU's Williams considers North Carolina

By DOUG TUCKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — K-State fans — 4-25 lifetime against Roy Williams — are loving this.

Their tormentor is not only contemplating moving to North Carolina and out of their hair, he's making it even more delicious for long-suffering fans of the Wildcats and every other Big 12 school by dragging out his decision.

"My heart breaks and tears well up in my eyes as I read that Roy Williams might leave the University of Kansas, where he has so endeared himself to the Wildcat faithful," crowed one K-State grad.

In the meantime, as two of the nation's premier basketball schools stand frozen, Williams left for his beachfront home in South Carolina to ponder the biggest decision of his professional career.

Should he stay at his beloved Kansas, where he's made two Final Four appearances, won 329 games and dominated the Big Eight/Big 12 Conference since 1988?

Or should he return to his beloved North Carolina? Tugging at his heart is the fact he was born and raised in Carolina and served as Dean Smith's faithful assistant for 10 years.

It's a day of decision that Kansas fans have long dreaded. They've always known North Carolina was probably the only job that might pry him away from Allen Fieldhouse, where Phog Allen coached and Wilt Chamberlain played and Roy Williams has become practically the most admired man in the state.

While Kansans appeared resigned that Williams was leaving, North Carolina was noncommittal.

"I don't anticipate anything being scheduled for several days at least," said Steve Kirschner, director of media relations for men's basketball and football at North Carolina.

Williams' 12 Kansas teams have been almost thoroughly dominant. Only Missouri, the Jayhawks' other main rival, has stayed close, winning 10 of 23 encounters with Williams.

Not even Bill Snyder, author of the miracle turnaround of K-State's football program, enjoys as much popularity.

In the packed news conference Friday evening, Williams pleaded for patience.

"The people in North Carolina don't really know what I have here," he said. "The people here don't realize what I'd have in North Carolina."

The NCAA's winningest coach in the 1990s, Williams promised a decision by Friday, the day before the beginning of the summer recruiting period.

"The only thing I'm saying is give me a little patience. Give me a couple of hours, give me a couple of days," he said.

Fans are also hoping the reality of tough competition in the Atlantic Coast Conference might give him pause.

"Who would you rather have as your archrival," asked one. "Duke — or Kansas State?"

Labor Day and the Fourth," Ronda Cudney said. "This happens to be one of them."

Ronda Cudney said they received a phone call in early June after they'd served from the parking lot of Staples.

Thunder Over Manhattan chairman Mike Fincham asked if they'd be interested in coming to Manhattan for the Fourth of July.

"We were thinking about going somewhere else, but we decided against it because this sounded like a lot more fun," Ronda Cudney said.

Other food vendors included pizza, snow cones, ice cream, popcorn and a 4-H watermelon stand.

Donations even played a part in the food sales.

"One of our members, Westside/Eastside Market, donates all the watermelons for the 4-H watermelon stand," Dellen said.

With full bellies, the crowd enjoyed a fireworks show that wrapped up the evening.

Dellen couldn't pinpoint her favorite part of the day.

"I enjoy it all," she said.

Ronda Cudney said she likes to see events like Thunder Over Manhattan develop.

"I like when events like this continue to grow," she said. "It's fascinating."

The group hoped to draw attention to the U.S.' 1893 takeover of the 11 Hawaiian Islands.

"It will take a little while for people to understand our situation in Hawaii, but it's got to start somewhere," activist John "Butch" Kekahu said.

Back at Monticello, the citizenship ceremony was the final step in a lengthy naturalization process.

"This is very special. All my other encounters have been in dingy offices with gruff immigration officers," said Zohra Siddiqui, 58.

Chris McMillon, junior in philosophy, lets camper Colby Short, 13, of Caldwell, Kan., speak into his bullhorn one evening before the campers go to the large pool at Rock Springs Ranch. The bullhorn was used to call his campers to the cabin for blood-sugar testing and to make announcements during outdoor activities.

Clinton disbarment case goes to GOP as judge steps aside

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A judge who helped write Arkansas' ethics laws stepped aside from hearing President Clinton's disbarment trial Wednesday, as the case fell to a judge appointed by the state's Republican governor last month.

Leon Johnson became a judge on June 2, replacing one ousted for misdeeds.

Since the state Supreme Court's disciplinary committee sued Clinton on Friday to strip him of his license to practice law, four judges assigned to preside at the trial have stepped aside, all citing ties to the president.

Clinton, as governor of Arkansas, had appointed three of them to judgeships. The fourth judge, Chris Piazza, said in stepping aside Wednesday that when he was a local prosecutor and Clinton was governor, Clinton had named him to a panel that drafted the state's ethics laws.

Weather not cooperating with Colorado firefighters

CRAIG, Colo. — Hot, dry, windy weather on Wednesday created difficult conditions for crews battling out-of-control fires on rugged terrain in western Colorado.

A blaze in the Dinosaur National Monument, about five miles from the Utah state line, was estimated at 9,000 acres.

There was no immediate threat to structures, but a campground near the Gates of Lodore, a popular rafting spot on the Green River, had been evacuated as a precaution and remained closed Wednesday.

The fire was likely to run into natural barriers in some spots, but firefighters were concerned that strong southwesterly wind could send sparks across Green River and threaten buildings in the Browns Park Wildlife Refuge.

"The terrain out there is extremely steep and canyon-like," said firefighters' spokeswoman Lynn Barclay. "We're actually having to ferry some of the crew to their destination by helicopter."

On Tuesday, humidity was only about 10 percent, with temperatures hitting the 90s and wind gusting to 20 mph.

In Nevada, however, lower temperatures, higher humidity and lighter wind had helped firefighters fully contain the biggest fire in the West, estimated at more than 37,000 acres some 200 miles northeast of Reno. Fire crews started heading home on Wednesday.

New York, Iowa residents die in firework-related accidents

A New York man was killed by a Fourth of July fireworks shell that nearly decapitated him when he peered into the mouth of a launch tube to try to figure out why the device didn't go off.

And an Iowa teen-ager was killed and five others were injured when fireworks thrown from the sports utility vehicle she was in blew back into the car, causing a fire and a crash.

In Des Moines, a sport utility vehicle caught fire and crashed into a pole as some of its occupants were throwing firecrackers out the windows, police said. One of the firecrackers had apparently blown back into the vehicle, igniting other fireworks.

French cinemas ignore ban on sexually explicit movie

PARIS — A violent, sexually explicit movie that opens with a harrowing rape scene has outraged France's political conservatives and provided a rallying point for defenders of artistic expression.

Last week, France's Council of State, responsible for interpreting rules and regulations, declared the film pornographic and said it could incite violence, exiling it to the country's few X-rated theaters. The film's title — which would not be publishable in most newspapers — is an obscene sexual command.

Rene Russo, Jason Alexander and Robert DeNiro star with Rocky and Bullwinkle in "The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle."

COURTESY PHOTO

Adults, children enjoy Rocky, Bullwinkle

By JIM REINTJES
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Hollywood is running out of ideas, and "The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle" is among the ever-growing pile of evidence. That's OK, because it's been more than 35 years since Rocky and Bullwinkle have been on the air, which gives them a lot to satirize.

movie review

The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle

Showing: Seth Childs Cinema at 7:15, 9:25 p.m.

Starring: Rene Russo, Jason Alexander, Robert DeNiro

The film immediately starts making fun of itself with the narrator pointing out the obvious and getting smart with Rocky and Bullwinkle.

Rocky and Bullwinkle must be rescued from reruns and move into the real world to save America from Fearless Leader, played by Robert DeNiro (who co-produced the film) and his RBTB empire. Leader has bought up all the cable networks to broadcast his "Really Bad TV" to make viewers zombified so they vote for him instead incumbent President Signoff.

Randy Quaid plays "Cappy" von Trappment, FBI boss who assigns FBI agent Karen Sympathy, played by Piper Perabo, who drives a sharp-looking New Beetle convertible (Volkswagen will produce one soon) to rescue Rocky and Bullwinkle from reruns. Sympathy has to get them to New York City in 46 hours to foil Leader's plans for "total zombification."

Sympathy is supposed to be a heartless, emotionless FBI agent, but she battles her inner child the entire film, trying to let her out.

Hot on the trail of Moose and Squirrel are spies Boris, played by Jason Alexander (George Costanza from "Seinfeld") and Natasha, played by Rene Russo. Russo looked the part, and her accent was dead on.

Alexander, who was never to svelte, seemed to have porked up a little to play Boris. His Costanza-like character was immediately recognizable, and as in "Seinfeld," he still can't jump.

What happens on their way to New York is predictable for the most part but enjoyable nonetheless. Certain scenes pay tribute to "The Blues Brothers," "E.T.," "2001: A Space Odyssey," "T2," "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" and "Taxi Driver." DeNiro, who has the same haircut he had in "Taxi Driver," even mimicked his famous "you talkin' to me" bit.

At one point in the film, Rocky and Bullwinkle seem stuck in a Chrysler commercial because every car in sight was a Sebring convertible. After repeated body damage from Bullwinkle's "I never said I could drive well" excuse, the grille hung on the Sebring so we knew it was a Chrysler.

This is a film both adults and kids can enjoy. I took my 10-year-old niece, who was unfamiliar with Rocky and Bullwinkle, and she liked the film. "Rocky and Bullwinkle" was an adult cartoon, like "The Simpsons" is now. A lot of the funny things in this film, children will not understand.

"Rocky and Bullwinkle" made fun of everything, from rental car companies to the presidency. At one point in the film, Leader says, "I love my RBTB." Maybe they are poking fun of NBC's Must See TV.

There are several cameo appearances. Janeane Garofalo and Jonathan Winters both played two characters. Whoopi Goldberg played a judge who proclaimed that "celebrities are above the law." Other cameos included John Goodman, Carl Reiner and Billy Crystal.

"Rocky and Bullwinkle" is a fun movie, a good time that gets through its 100 minutes briskly. At every turn something is being satirized or spoofed, and the wise-guy banter between the narrator and the characters is great.

This film is sure to get overshadowed by "The Patriot" and "The Perfect Storm" at the box office, but if you don't want to take a film seriously that doesn't take itself seriously, go see "Rocky and Bullwinkle" and have a good time.

"Road Trip" — Imagine the flavor of "The Tom Green Show" in coming-of-age movie format.

"Fantasia 2000" — Psychedelic animation, classic characters, classical music.

"The Patriot" — Or "American Braveheart." Less patriotic than vengeful, but Mel Gibson's still Mel Gibson.

"Shaft" — Damn right! Samuel L. Jackson is so cool, and he's so cool for about two hours. That's your movie.

"Chicken Run" — Humorous, humane tale of chickens plotting their own great escape. Better than roughly all the year's other animated films combined.

"Me, Myself & Irene" — Jim Carrey/Farrelly brothers vehicle. Fans will be delighted; nonfans probably will not be converted.

"The Perfect Storm" — Lots of water and rain, and there's a boat, and Dr. Ross and Marky Mark are on board. No fish were harmed while making this movie.

"Mission: Impossible 2" — You got John Woo. You got Tom Cruise. You got an Anthony Hopkins cameo and some sweet fight scenes. Turn off your frontal lobe and drool.

"Titan A.E." — It's like "Star Wars," but animated, less epic and with a much worse soundtrack.

"Big Momma's House" — Martin Lawrence in exquisite cosmetic disguises, conveniently released between "Nutty Professor" and "Nutty Professor II."

"The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle" — For a review of Moose and Squirrel, see left.

"Gone in 60 Seconds" — Lots of cars get stolen, and stolen quickly. Some crash.

Westloop Theatres

"Battlefield Earth" — This film is a laboratory experiment designed to induce pain in those who view it. Do not see this movie. Barely preferable to nailing a wooden plank to one's own forehead.

"28 Days" — Steve Buscemi counsels Sandra Bullock. Repeat. Steve Buscemi counsels Sandra Bullock.

"Keeping the Faith" — A priest and a rabbi fall in love with the same girl. Insert your own punchline.

"Rules of Engagement" — A stirring treatise on the perils of the U.S. foreign policy in Yemen. Yes, Yemen.

"Where the Heart Is" — Queen Amidala has a baby in Wal-Mart. As heart warming as a 2-hour-long corporate plug can be.

"Boiler Room" — It's like "Wall Street," just without the Sheens, Michael Douglas or good reviews.

Bosnian Serb denies rape of 4 Muslims during war

By JEROME SOCOLOVSKY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — A Bosnian Serb, accused of taking four Muslim women from a sports hall and molesting them during the Bosnian war, denied on Wednesday he raped them and said he was shocked when first told of the allegations.

Dragoljub Kunarac, who reportedly headed a local paramilitary group and is also accused of handing over women to his troops for sex, testified at an international war crimes trial on charges of sexual enslavement.

Kunarac is one of three Bosnian Serb fighters charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity for the rape, torture and enslavement of women and girls in the southeast Bosnian town of Foca in the summer of 1992.

The trial is the first prosecution of wartime sexual enslavement before an international tribunal. Defense lawyers admit that rapes took place in the Foca area, but deny their clients were guilty of war crimes.

Prosecutors are trying to prove the rapes were committed in a systematic manner in an ethnic-cleansing campaign to frighten local Muslims into flight from territories conquered by Serb forces.

Kunarac told the U.N. tribunal that he first heard the allegations on Aug. 3, 1992, from a Bosnian Serb journalist, Gordana Draskovic, who told him four women had claimed they were forced to have sex with Kunarac and soldiers under his control.

"I was shocked," Kunarac said, staring straight at the three judges from the witness stand. "I could not understand whether she was pulling my leg or whether she was actually telling the truth."

Kunarac testified that he told the reporter: "I had nothing to do with all of this whatsoever."

In the trial now in its fourth month, 16 Muslim women have testified they were raped and mutilated day and night by rifle-wielding soldiers.

Irish riots continue for 4th day

By SHAWN POGATCHNIK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Protestants formed human blockades that jammed Belfast's streets Wednesday, then rioted, throwing gasoline bombs and setting off fireworks, in a bid to exhaust British security forces that are preventing a march in a Catholic neighborhood.

It was the fourth straight day of protests aiming to force authorities to allow the Orange Order, Northern Ireland's once-dominant Protestant brotherhood, to parade down Garvaghy Road, the main Catholic section of Portadown, an overwhelmingly Protestant town 30 miles southwest of Belfast.

Thousands of hard-line Protestants blocked more than a dozen roads simultaneously at evening rush hour, causing one of the worst traffic jams Belfast has ever seen. Motorists were trapped on some streets for two hours.

As those protests subsided, masked youths began tossing gas bombs at police armored cars and hijacked vehicles. Black smoke from burning vehicles stained the evening sky in south-central Belfast, where Protestant youths also pounded drums and played anti-Catholic tunes on flutes.

Summer travel made easier with plans

By NANCY HULL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Summertime often equals travel time for many people.

When vacationing, there are ways to balance a travel budget and avoid running into problems that can occur while away from home.

Travel agents say that by planning ahead and exploring all options, vacationers usually can travel for reasonable prices.

Sally Garvin, co-owner of Creative Travel in Manhattan, said cruises give people the best value.

"Everything is taken care of for you for one price," she said.

"You're really taken care of like royalty."

Garvin said there are good package deals aside from cruises for students vacationing to Mexico.

"It depends on the location in Mexico, but Cancun usually has good deals," she said.

Penny Tuckel, owner of Mark I Travel in Topeka, said traveling to Hawaii can be done on a reasonable budget if people aren't too choosy about hotels.

Tuckel said Europe is a popular summer destination for students.

"Students usually budget carefully for Europe and know how much they can spend on food and lodging each day," Tuckel said.

Betsy Chilen, junior in business, said she saved money while traveling in Europe by staying in youth hostels and avoided paying for night stays by taking overnight trains.

"I was able to get a cheaper flight by looking around and finding student discounts," she said.

Before going abroad, Tuckel said people should check to make sure their ATM cards can be used in foreign countries.

Tuckel said she recommends travelers vacationing abroad and nationally to use ATM cards instead of traveler's checks.

"ATMs are more convenient, they're always open and there's almost one on every corner," she said.

Robbie Zabel, senior in marketing and general management and entrepreneurship, traveled to Chicago this summer and said he used his credit card and cash.

"Credit cards are more convenient to use, but they can also get you in more trouble," Zabel said.

Tuckel said there are basics that will ease travel plans.

"It's important to establish a relationship with a local travel agency, buy a good travel guide and always know where you want to go once you're at the destination," Tuckel said.

Local airport offers outlet to world

By NANCY HULL

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Vacationers looking to shave time off their travel plans can look to the Manhattan Regional Airport.

The airport offers seven daily departures to Kansas City International Airport on weekdays, three flights on Saturdays and five on Sundays.

"Time is valuable," Ken Black, director of airport services, said. "When flying out of Manhattan, you don't have to make that two- to three-hour drive to Kansas City."

US Airways Express provides flights to KCI. Travelers flying to KCI from Manhattan and continuing on US Airways usually can get to KCI for $30 to $35, Black said. Black said US Airways can take vacationers from KCI to almost anywhere in the eastern United States. When using another airline at KCI, the price from Manhattan to KCI can vary.

Black said flying out of Manhattan benefits business travelers.

"This way you can go on your own schedule, not someone else's schedule," Black said. "Driving three hours one way in a car takes up three hours of a business day and adds six hours to a trip all together."

Black said he is expecting flights from Manhattan to KCI to add transitions to a west-bound airline by late summer or early fall.

Manhattan's airport also offers free parking, four rental car companies and a restaurant.

ticket prices

Summer vacationers are booking flights and packing their bags — even though air fares are up.

Besides the higher jet fuel costs, Penny Tuckel, owner of Mark I Travel in Topeka, said fares increase in summer because the seasonal demand for travel is up.

This year, the main airlines imposed widespread fare increases. There was a $20 fuel surcharge in January, and in May there was an increase of up to $30 per round trip.

Sally Garvin, co-owner of Creative Travel in Manhattan, said she hasn't seen a decrease in people traveling.

"Last summer was actually slower," Garvin said. "Maybe it was just an off-year."

Garvin said the biggest price increase is on travel to the West Coast. She said round-trip tickets to Los Angeles used to be available for $158 and now can cost around $370.

Tuckel said people should take advantage of fare sales that result from price wars to get the best deals. Three weeks ago, there was a 48-hour sale that offered round-trip tickets to the West Coast for about $200, Tuckel said.

Tuckel said she is expecting lower air fares in September and October, but for summer, the rates will stay up.

K-State junior volunteers with diabetic children at Rock Springs' Camp Discovery; teaches ownership of personal health

PHOTOS & STORY BY KAREN MIKOLS

Seeds are scattered in the grass around the abandoned, half-eaten watermelon that sits at the base of the sycamore tree outside of the dining hall.

In the boys' cabin, insulin syringes, blood-monitoring supplies and a medical clipboard sit on the table as wet towels and swimming trunks hang from the rafters.

Chris McMillon, junior in philosophy, calls the next camper to check his blood sugar.

This is Camp Discovery, a summer camp sponsored by the American Diabetes Association for children with diabetes.

Diabetes is a disease people develop when the pancreas stops producing enough of a hormone called insulin to control the digested sugar in the blood, said Dr. Manfred Menking, pediatrician and pediatric endocrinologist from Wichita, who is also the camp physician.

All of the campers have Type I diabetes. Type I diabetes can be controlled by insulin injections, monitoring the level of sugar in one's blood and eating a relatively low-sugar diet.

Camp Discovery was founded 27 years ago by several parents who had diabetic children.

"We thought it was a good idea to have a camp for diabetic kids because they could discover they could do anything they wanted to as long as they took care of their disease," said Max Johnston, one of the camp founders.

While camp started with only a few families running the entire week, Johnston said the parents had a bigger vision for the camp.

"Our goal was to raise our own counselors," he said. "Ten or 11 this session are homegrown counselors. They are super role models."

McMillon is an example of a "home-grown counselor." This is his 14th year at the camp, which is located about eight miles south of Junction City at Rock Springs 4H Camp. This summer is also McMillon's fifth year to volunteer as a counselor.

McMillon was diagnosed with diabetes when he was 9 months old. He is 20 now. He said going to camp at a young age helped him to take ownership of his health.

"I had never given my own shot," McMillon said. "My parents always did it. I was scared."

"The first night, I drew my insulin up," he said. "I remember standing back by my bunk for the longest time with my shot. I didn't know how to give it, and I was too scared to ask for help, so I just learned because they were getting ready to turn out the lights.

"I just stuck the needle in my arm. It didn't hurt, and I've been doing it ever since."

McMillon said he thinks one of the most important aspects of camp is campers learning to be independent as well as gaining knowledge about their disease.

"We fear a lot of what we don't understand," McMillon said.

"A lot of kids don't understand their disease. I want to make them understand it's something they can live with.

"I remember how much difference camp made for me as a child and want to give it back to others," he said.

"I just want to be a good role model."

Protesters chained selves to Gore campaign headquarters

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Environmental demonstrators chained themselves together in front of the entrance to Al Gore's campaign office and hung protest banners on the building on Monday.

Gore promotes himself as a friend of the environment and is author of "Earth in the Balance." But protesters said they saw little difference between him and his Republican presidential rival, Texas Gov. George W. Bush.

About 100 members of the group Earth First! danced and chanted in the foyer of the campaign offices — 160 miles east of Gore's national headquarters in Nashville.

Parody propels 'Scary Movie' to top box-office earnings

LOS ANGELES — Two horror flicks were the box-office surprises last summer. The surprise of this year's season so far is the horror parody "Scary Movie."

The anything-goes gross-out comedy took in $42.3 million in its opening weekend, the best debut ever for an R-rated movie and the second-highest premiere this year, after "Mission: Impossible 2." "Scary Movie," directed by Keenen Ivory Wayans and starring his brothers Marlon and Shawn, also brought in more than two of this summer's most anticipated movies did in their debuts last weekend.

President of NAACP chastises black S.C. legislators over flag

BALTIMORE — Black South Carolina state lawmakers who backed a compromise that left the Confederate flag flying on statehouse property are "weak-kneed, shift-eyed, back-bending legislators," the NAACP's president said Monday.

"Until the flag is removed from a place of sovereignty, there will be no compromise on the Confederate flag," Kweisi Mfume said in an hour-long address before 1,500 delegates at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's annual meeting. His remarks were met by applause and laughter.

The Confederate flag was removed from the capitol dome in Columbia, S.C., on July 1 but, under the terms of a compromise worked out in the legislature, another one was erected on a 30-foot flagpole on the statehouse grounds.

Philippines garbage collapse kills 31, injures 29 Monday

MANILA, Philippines — A mountain of garbage loosened by rain collapsed and burst into flames Monday at Manila's biggest dump, flattening squatters' shanties and killing 31 people, officials said.

Some 29 other people were injured and at least 68 remained missing late Monday, Red Cross spokeswoman Tess Usapdin said. The victims were poor people who earn a living by scavenging garbage in the Payatas dump.

Rescuers dug through the wall of rotting garbage late into the night, but were hampered by the stench and lack of equipment, she said.

THE ADVENTURE OF A
LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years
to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective — but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation — as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try — you won't regret it.

UNDERPAYING FACULTY

COULD RESULT IN TENSION

K-State faculty are underpaid and might be underappreciated by some.

In the past 10 years, tuition has almost tripled inflation, while faculty salaries don't even double the inflation rate.

This leaves most faculty members feeling as if their work is often overlooked, especially unclassified professionals. If the Legislature continues to differentiate between the two classes of faculty, hard feelings could arise between the two, creating tension and uneasiness.

Educators blame the Legislature for the low salaries. Legislators blame the lack of money. With greater cooperation, faculty salaries in Kansas could rival other state schools.

Until then, Kansas and this university will continue to lose valuable educators. Raising salaries doesn't just give professors and unclassified professionals more money in their pockets; they bring better and brighter students and more money for research.

It's time for everyone involved to realize where Kansas schools could be heading if something isn't done to better the situation.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Too many limits determined by courts, education boards

From the looks of recent rulings by state Supreme Courts and Boards of Education, one would think we've all given up on the 21st century and have reverted back a few hundred years.

On Thursday, the Colorado Board of Education adopted 5-1 a non-binding resolution to encourage "the appropriate display in schools and other public buildings of the national motto."

BRANDI HERTIG

"In God we trust" in public schools is that it would provide a "moral compass" for the school's children.

On the same day, the Louisiana Supreme Court upheld the state's 195-year-old sodomy law, which, if violated, can land someone in jail for up to five years — even consenting married adults who engage in anal or oral sex. Justice Chet Traylor wrote in the 5-2 decision, "Simply put, commission of what the Legislature determines as an immoral act, even if consensual and private, is an injury against society itself."

The United States is the richest, most powerful nation in the world, sought by many for intervention and aid. It prides itself on its democracy and its nickname, "Land of the free." Does it boggle the mind that there is actually a place in this nation where it is illegal to have oral sex? Does it boggle the mind that there are several places in this nation where separation of church and state really means religion shrewdly presented in public schools under the guise of a "moral compass" is OK? It should.

Before I start calling for the abolition of all state legislatures, however, I think it's important to note that it's not necessarily a bad thing that states wield so much power in law making. However, when it gets to the point that freedom of religion means different things in each state, and when legislative bodies begin to decide what private sexual activities between consenting adults are immoral, then one begins to wonder what the federal government is there for.

Of course, freedom of religion is the more important example here, because there's no mention of freedom of sexual expression in the Bill of Rights. Maybe there should be. Oh, but that's a whole other column.

There's not much of a point to having a Bill of Rights for the entire nation if each state can interpret it differently. As far as the motto "In God we trust" goes, many people in Colorado have argued that it has no religious implications, and therefore the posting of it in public schools is not in violation of separation of church and state.

Despite this claim, this cannot be true. People tend to associate morals with religion, and more particularly in this country, Christianity. The word "God" in the motto is not what makes it religious, but the insistence that it will provide students with a "moral compass." The insistence that morals will come from the display of this motto in public schools is tantamount to insisting that religion in schools will end everything wrong with the system.

If we are a country with the word "united" in our name, the federal government must put limits on how far states can deviate from each other when interpreting laws or the Bill of Rights. Some states, such as Louisiana, shouldn't be allowed to govern someone's consensual bedroom habits, and other states, such as Colorado, shouldn't be allowed to slip a little religion into the public school system. At this rate, the country might as well form 50 independent nations.

Range of Supreme Court rulings diverse in scope, scale

For Supreme Court watchers, the 1999-2000 term, which ended June 28, was one big multiple orgasm after another — the biggest ones all coming at the end.

Although this term decided on only 73 cases, the fewest of any term since the early 1950s, many Supreme Court watchers have considered this term one of the most important, in both scope and scale of its rulings.

The range of cases reviewed was diverse and covered such fundamental issues as abortion, federalism, due process, criminal law, free speech, free association, separation of church and state, civil rights, voting rights, federal law and federal regulation.

Of these, one of the more interesting cases was the Santa Fe school district v. Doe.

The Santa Fe school district has had a long and unsuccessful history trying to integrate prayer into school.

In recent years, the Supreme Court has deemed voluntary student prayer in public schools, while solo or in a group, constitutionally protected free speech. Thus, in a thinly veiled attempt to interpose prayer into school and to circumvent the Establishment Clause, the district adopted a policy authorizing two elections: first, to determine whether "invocations to solemnize the event" should be delivered at football games, and second, to select a spokesperson for the invocation.

The district believed this to be protected free speech because the invocations were student organized and given at an event where attendance was voluntary.

The Supreme Court correctly recognized the district's actions as government-endorsed religion for two main reasons.

1) Many students find high school football games a significant event of their school years, and no student should have to decide between attending a football game or not being subjected to a religious ritual that they do not share.

2) As written in the majority decision, the invocation is delivered "on school property, at school-sponsored events, over the school's public address system," by a speaker "under the supervision of school faculty, and pursuant to a school policy that explicitly and implicitly encourages public prayer."

It is further written that the district had no intent "to open its ceremony to indiscriminate use by the student body generally, ... but, rather, allows only one student, the same student for the entire season, to give the invocation, which is subject to particular regulations that confine the content and topic of the student's message. The majoritarian process by the District guarantees, by definition, that minority candidates will never prevail and that their view will be effectively silenced."

This is a perfect example what Alexis de Tocqueville foresaw and warned against in our fledgling nation: a tyranny of the majority resultant from radical egalitarianism.

This tyranny of the majority is further evident by the fact that the plaintiffs (two families, one Catholic and the other Mormon) were allowed to remain anonymous (i.e. Doe) because the judge who first tried this case understood the kind of backlash the plaintiffs would receive for their challenge.

Moreover, a month later, the trial judge entered a second order forbidding school officials from continuing efforts to "ferret out" the plaintiffs because of the possibility of harassment and intimidation.

Fortunately, the judicial system put this tyranny in check.

The question that remains is does this ruling suppress a valedictorian's freedom of speech to thank one's personal deity for achievements?

The answer should be no. The valedictorian is not selected by popular vote but by grade point average. This is provided that the selected student is free to express any beliefs the student holds, including unpopular minority beliefs.

But we'll just have to wait and see if and when the Supreme Court rules on that case.

Clinton rates Mideast conflict as most difficult peace problem

By BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — About to kick off a last-ditch summit, President Clinton said Monday the most difficult conflict in the world is the dispute he will try to settle between Israel and the Palestinians.

Clinton also encouraged Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak to not be distracted by his political woes at home.

"This is really, I think, a matter of trying to come to grips with the issues on the merits," Clinton said in an exchange with reporters before flying to Pennsylvania for a governors' conference.

Barak barely survived a no-confidence motion in the 120-member Israeli parliament Monday.

The opposition, anxious about his projected concessions to Yasser Arafat on territory and Jerusalem, outpolled the government, 54-52, but it could not muster the 61 votes needed.

Clinton, possibly referring to a recent poll, said a solid majority of Israelis "want him to come and want him to pursue peace." In the same vein, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said the prime minister can make peace despite the defection of three political parties from his government.

"He is not going to make an agreement that jeopardizes his people," Albright said.

In a poll published Sunday by the Yediot Ahronot newspaper, 52 percent of Israelis said Barak should go to the summit while 45 percent said he should stay home.

Barak's foreign minister, David Levy, will be remaining in Israel.

Levy has served in both Likud and Labor governments and is considered a barometer of Israeli public opinion.

Barak, in a statement before his departure for the summit, told the Israeli people that "this is the time to take decisions and to bequest a better future to our children."

He said the negotiations would be heart-rending and that no deal is perfect.

"The reality of life is highly complicated," he said.

Clinton, nearing the end of an eight-year presidency in which he has dealt with conflict in the Balkans, Ireland and the Persian Gulf, said the Israeli-Palestinian dispute "is perhaps the most difficult of all the peace problems in the world, certainly dealing with the most difficult issues of the whole Middle East peace process."

But, he said, Barak and Arafat both "have the vision, the knowledge, the experience and the ability and sheer guts to do what it takes, I think, to reach an agreement, and then to take it back to their people and see if they can sell it."

"I am going to try to help them," Clinton said.

Clinton said Barak was able to negotiate with the knowledge the Israeli public would have the final say in a referendum.

Last week, the president said he hoped an overall settlement could be reached within a few days.

He is due to fly to Japan for an economic conference with the leaders of seven other countries on July 19.

On Monday, Clinton said the two sides already have a pretty clear idea of what the various options are and "it's not as if we don't know what's out there to be done."

But he said he did not want to set an artificial deadline for the talks.

Some analysts doubt an agreement can be forged quickly, particularly one that deals with the emotional issue of Jerusalem.

"My guess is you can't achieve an agreement in eight days," said Samuel Lewis, a former U.S. ambassador to Israel.

Regents' request for increase in faculty salaries could aid in equalizing faculty raises

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

An 8.2 percent, across-the-board increase for faculty salaries recently requested by the Kansas Board of Regents could help equalize the raises of ranked faculty and unclassified professionals.

Pending approval by the governor and the Kansas Legislature, the 8.2-percent increase, the highest-ever proposed, would go into effect July 1, 2001.

The regents' request is for all faculty — professors, assistant professors, associate professors and unclassified professionals, who include advisers, physicians and librarians.

Whether the increase will pass will be determined during the spring 2001 legislative session. John Struve, K-State budget director, said he is hopeful that it will pass.

"It's too early to know how the governor and Legislature will react to this, but we're hopeful they'll honor the request," he said.

This request is coming after two years of a two-tiered system, which the Legislature differentiated between ranked faculty and unclassified professionals, said regents director Bill Docking.

The last salary increase, which took effect July 1, raised rates by 5.9 percent for ranked faculty and 2.5 percent for unclassified staff. The previous year, there was only a slight difference between the two raises. Before that, the raises were always the same.

Differentiating can cause tension among unclassified professionals, Gretchen Holden, faculty senator, said.

"It's very disheartening and demoralizing to be told your role isn't as valued as professors," she said. "We think of ourselves as being part of the team. We all contribute to the mission of this university."

"Then they give us this tiny number that doesn't even compare to the cost of living," she said.

The low salaries and uneven raises are affecting more than the morale of the staff, Holden said.

"We are not able to recruit who we want to," she said. "We are not retaining the people we need."

That's why it's so important for the Legislature to pass the 8.2-raise request as is, Holden said.

Docking said increasing the salaries of all faculty, especially unclassified professionals, is a top priority for the regents.

If the request is fully funded, it would not only decrease the gap among K-State's faculty members, but it would also bring the salaries of ranked faculty and unclassified professionals to the same level as peer universities in about three years, Docking said.

The recent 3-percent tuition increase, which should generate $5.5 million for the state, will help this cause, said Marvin Burris, director of fiscal affairs for the regents.

5.9-percent salary increase for all faculty last year, it would have cost the state an additional $6.5 million, Burris said, which was money the state just didn't have.

If the 8.2-percent raise doesn't pass, K-State will continue to lobby for its faculty, Struve said.

"If the governor were to recommend differential between faculty and unclassified, we, the regents, would work very hard to equalize the two," Struve said.

Holden said it is evident the regents want to improve teaching conditions, but she said she is unhappy with Legislature's actions.

"I think the regents want to work with us," she said. "Unfortunately, tax cuts are more important to the Legislature than improving the quality of life and education in Kansas."

Mel Gibson, British soldiers clash in 3-hour summer epic, 'The Patriot'

Mel Gibson (3rd from right) fights against British occupation — this time on American soil in "The Patriot."

"The Patriot" isn't just a three-hour movie; it's a three-hour adventure, whisking the viewer away to feel a roller coaster of emotions.

"The Patriot"

Showing: Seth Childs
Cinema at 7, 10:15 p.m.
Starring: Mel Gibson,
Heath Ledger

Set in South Carolina in 1776 during the American Revolution, Mel Gibson portrays Benjamin Martin, a single father of seven children. He is a former war hero of the French and Indian War who refuses to fight in the Revolutionary War. He has fought his fights, has seen what goes on and doesn't want to do it again. He doesn't want his children to, either.

Martin wants to raise his children peacefully, and feels any involvement in the war would disrupt that.

After a chain of events, Martin realizes his family will fall apart if he doesn't get involved in the war.

That's where the real excitement begins. He and his oldest son join forces to try to make a difference in the downhill battle against the British.

Though the main plot alone keeps the viewer entranced, a few smaller plots accompany it. They add excitement and the love element that many seek to the movie.

The screenplay and casting are brilliant. Gibson portrays Benjamin Martin perfectly, revealing raw emotions of anger, pain and joy to the entire audience. His performance is exceptional, and makes viewers feel as though they are right there with him.

The rest of the casting is just as spectacular, with Gibson's right-hand man — his oldest son — portrayed by Heath Ledger of "10 Things I Hate About You."

Brigades engage in live-fire training

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two of Fort Riley's brigades got a chance to do something last Friday they rarely do.

Both the 1st Battalion, 4th Air Defense Artillery and the 4th Battalion, 3rd Air Defense Artillery of the Charlie battery, participated in their annual Stinger live-fire training. The drill was a chance for the soldiers to show off their stuff, 1st Lt. Mark Gruzinski said.

"This is a year's worth of battle-focus training," Gruzinski said. "They're the best of all the soldiers that have been training over the last year."

The live-fire training comprised five teams from the 1st Battalion and four teams from the 4th Battalion. Each team included a team chief, who was more experienced with weaponry and served as the coach and a gunner who used the event for missile practice. Each team fired the missiles from either a Humvee or a tank.

Spc. Tobby Daniels said the soldiers must hoist the 36-pound missiles on their shoulders. A sight antenna then must be set up to determine if approaching aircraft is friendly. If the aircraft is an enemy, the gunner engages the target in the range ring.

The gunner then must elevate the missile slightly and fire.

The Stinger missile, considered a second-generation missile, uses a combination of distinguishing ultraviolet rays and heat sources, to hit targets. Stinger missiles have a range of targets are beneficial for training.

"This is a more realistic scenario," Downs said. "Much more so than something that just goes up and comes down."

Downs also said excitement was high for the day.

"We're real excited to do this," he said. "We usually get about four missiles per battery. Now you have two batteries firing nine missiles, and you can see the rather large turnout we have of family and friends. A lot of the various officials from Fort Riley and the surrounding will show up."

Gruzinski said the live-fire training gives soldiers an idea of real wartime scenarios.

"Basically, this is as close to the real thing as you get in a peacetime environment," Gruzinski said. "Even if you don't get a direct hit every time, just for the training ability to fire missiles is helpful."

There was a competition between the two units to see which would hit more RCMAT's.

The First Battalion hit three of its four shots, while the other unit did not connect on any of its five attempts.

Pvt. Brent Reed, a gunner who engaged the targets, said the training was exciting.

"It was a big rush," Reed said. "To have a weapon on your shoulder and launching it off ... Wow."

MICHAEL YOUNG/COLLEGIAN

Two of the one-fifth scale remote-control aircraft are displayed during the Stinger missile practice session. The planes were mounted with flares to radiate heat and simulate aircraft engines so that the Stinger missile could detect the target.

4 kilometers. Gruzinski said while Stinger missiles are fairly accurate and improvements are being made.

"Right now, the army is working on a third-generation missile, which has increased range for actually engaging aircraft," Gruzinski said.

The missiles' targeted radio-controlled aircraft. The aircraft, one-fifth scale of a normal-sized aircraft, are called radio controlled moving aerial targets.

First Lt. Richard Downs said these

Bill could give money to Fort Riley; funds to be used for renovations

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fort Riley might be seeing some changes if President Clinton approves a military construction bill that will allocate $62 million for projects at Fort Riley, McConnell Air Force Base and the Kansas Army National Guard.

The bill passed Congress and, if signed by Clinton, it will give $37 million to Fort Riley alone. The money would be used to construct a 4-million-gallon per day wastewater treatment plant that will meet state and national environmental standards. Three plants, built in the late 1950s, would be demolished as part of the $22 million plan.

The other $15 million would be used to complete the construction of barracks that would house more than 300 soldiers. It would contain a community facility, roads and parking lots.

The barracks complex project was first funded in fiscal year 1999 and received additional funding in fiscal year 2000. If the bill is signed, the funds will be added to fiscal year 2001, allowing the project to be completed.

If Clinton does not sign the bill, the completion of the project will be postponed until further funds are received.

"We, of course, have our fingers crossed," said Mike Goreham, installation master planner at public works who has been overseeing the barracks renewal project.

Both appropriations and authorization bills must be signed by Clinton for Fort Riley to receive the funds for the water treatment plant.

For the barracks to receive funding, only an appropriations bill must be passed. It has already had two authorization bills passed, one in 1999 and one in 2000.

The new barracks would be at the Army's new 1+1 barracks standard. The new standard means each soldier will have a minimum of 110 net square feet of living area, a 20-square-foot built-in closet, and a latrine and service area shared with no more than one other soldier.

Goreham said the new wastewater treatment plant would use the best technology available to treat the water and would be up to par with the stricter guidelines on water quality.

He is optimistic the bills will all be passed.

"Generally, if the House and Senate agree on the appropriations, they'll agree on the authorization," he said. "We're certainly hopeful here."

Bush continues minority outreach

By KAREN GULLO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Death penalty protesters interrupted an introduction for Texas Gov. George W. Bush on Monday at the NAACP national convention, with one shouting, "An innocent man was murdered by Governor Bush."

Security forces led the four or five protesters out after they waved signs with pictures of Gary Graham, who was executed June 22 in Texas. Graham, who was convicted largely on the testimony of one witness, was the 135th prisoner executed since Bush became governor in 1995.

"Remember Gary Graham! Remember Gary Graham!" the protesters shouted as Bush was introduced, but before he began to speak.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has called the execution of Graham a "gross travesty of justice" and has called for a national moratorium on all executions.

In his speech, the Republican presidential candidate appeared to acknowledge the protesters, saying, "For those of you who support me — I see a couple here, maybe more than a couple — I hope you will not change your opinion. For those of you who don't, I hope you ... give me the chance to tell me what is in my heart."

Bush said he recognizes that the Republican Party has not always been seen as friendly towards the NAACP or blacks.

"While some in my party have avoided the NAACP and some in the NAACP have avoided my party, I am proud to be here," Bush said. "... There is no denying that the party of Lincoln has not always carried the mantle of Lincoln."

Calling slavery a blight on our past, Bush said racism still exists to this day, and he urged blacks and whites to get along.

"Our nation is harmed when we let our differences divide us," he said.

Bush's comments were met with mostly polite applause.

In 1996, the GOP presidential nominee Bob Dole refused an invitation to speak to the NAACP convention, citing a scheduling conflict. Bush's father, former President Bush, spoke to the group both as a presidential candidate in 1988 and in 1992, when he lost to Bill Clinton.

Smokers' attorney asks for $196 billion to punish tobacco industry

By CATHERINE WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Smokers in a landmark class-action case asked a jury for a record-shattering $196 billion Monday to punish the tobacco industry for "a half-century trail of deceit which has decimated millions of Americans."

"Never have so few caused so much harm to so many for so long, and the day of reckoning has arrived," attorney Stanley Rosenblatt said as closing arguments began in the two-year trial involving 300,000 to 700,000 sick Florida smokers.

Each side has two days to summarize its case.

The case represents what could be the gravest legal threat ever to the nation's five biggest cigarette makers.

The six-member jury already has decided that the industry makes a deadly product and ordered it to pay $12.7 million in compensatory damages to three representative smokers.

Now it must decide how much to award in punitive damages, which are intended to punish and deter misconduct.

The verdict easily could set a U.S. record for punitive damages in a product liability case, surpassing the $4.8 billion against General Motors last year in a California car fire. A judge reduced that to $1.09 billion.

Rosenblatt suggested jurors consider a range of $123 billion to $196 billion.

Witnesses for smokers testified the defendants could afford $150 billion to $157 billion.

Tobacco companies think that figures in the "billions are just for the Wall Street people, just for the investment banks," Rosenblatt told jurors.

"Hopefully, you're going to "Never have so few caused so much harm to so many for so long, and the day of reckoning has arrived."

— Stanley Rosenblatt, attorney for the plaintiff

show them that regular people not engaged in high finance are not intimidated by these numbers at all."

Tobacco companies have argued they should not be required to pay any more than their combined net worth of $15.3 billion, the difference between assets and liabilities on their balance sheets. But Circuit Judge Robert Kaye refused to set any limit on damages.

The industry has expressed fear of a ruinous verdict of perhaps $300 billion.

However, Florida law says a punitive-damages verdict cannot put a company out of business, and judges are required to reduce any award that would.

Also, some tobacco states — including Virginia, North Carolina and Kentucky — have passed laws in recent months intended to shield the industry from the crippling effects of a big verdict.

The case — the first smokers' class-action lawsuit to go to trial — is expected to go to the jury late this week.

Any decision can be appealed and could take at least two years to move through Florida's appeals courts.

The industry settled lawsuits with states in 1998 for about $254 billion over the next 25 years.

But the settlements do not prevent individuals from suing.

The key tobacco defense is that the industry has changed its ways since states began suing in 1994 and that the settlements are punishment enough.

Rosenblatt disputed that, walking jurors through testimony during the trial from the chiefs for all five tobacco companies.

"Have you really changed or is it all fluff?" he asked.

"Are you going to have to pay the price for your misconduct?"

Liggett Group Inc. has been at the forefront of the industry's position, saying for three years that cigarettes cause cancer and are addictive.

The company turned over thousands of secret industry documents that pushed other companies into the settlements in 1998.

Lorillard Tobacco Co. admitted the health risks of smoking for the first time on the witness stand last month. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. took that position earlier.

Industry-leading Philip Morris Inc. and No. 2 R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. have cited public-health warnings about the risks of smoking but do not say that smoking causes disease.

Lesbian granted visitation to partner's children by N.Y.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — A lesbian who helped raise the two children of her ex-lover has been granted temporary visitation in a ruling believed to be the first of its kind in New York.

The plaintiff, identified only as Janis, had a parental bond with her former girlfriend's 4-year-old boy and 2-year-old girl, Westchester Family Court Judge Joan Cooney said in her ruling Monday.

Cooney allowed Janis to see the children for four hours every other week, beginning Sunday. A hearing on permanent custody was set for Aug. 14.

"These children have the right of any other children to continue a loving relationship with their parents," Cooney said.

Joan Iacono, Janis' lawyer, said a New York judge had never granted even temporary visitation to a woman or man under such circumstances.

Sign over vending machine falls, kills 11-year-old child

CARTERSVILLE, Ga. — A 200-pound neon sign over a vending machine fell as an 11-year-old girl was getting a drink, killing her and injuring her mother.

Anna Chambers of Marietta was at a Speedway convenience store when the sign, attached to the ceiling, came loose as she reached for a cup.

"Poor little girl," Bartow County Sheriff's Sgt. Tommy Stanley said. "She was just trying to get a Coca-Cola, just innocent. She didn't do anything and the sign fell."

Her mother, Karen Chambers, was treated at a hospital for head injuries and released. Her father was not injured.

Education critical to future of economy, Greenspan says

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In the new high-tech economy, government must go beyond simply wiring classrooms for the Internet and establish specific guidelines for how computer skills are taught, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said Tuesday.

In a speech to the National Governors' Association, Greenspan said government has no greater challenge than making sure it properly educates students to keep pace with a rapidly changing economy.

"If we are to remain preeminent in transforming knowledge into economic value, the U.S. system of higher education must remain the world's leader in generating scientific and technological breakthroughs and in preparing workers to meet the evolving demands for skilled labor," Greenspan told the governors.

6 convicted drug traffickers hanged in Tehran on Saturday

TEHRAN, Iran — Six men convicted of drug trafficking have been hanged in the Iranian capital, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

"Six men who were members of an international gang ... were hanged in the Qasr prison campus after the verdict was upheld by the Supreme Court," the daily Iran said.

The report said the men, who were hanged Saturday, had smuggled narcotics such as opium, heroin and morphine from neighboring Pakistan and Afghanistan. The newspaper gave no further details.

SPORTS *briefs1st baseman selected to play in all-star game

Mark English, senior first baseman for the K-State baseball team, was selected to participate in the second annual Coastal Plain League All-Star game, played Tuesday in Wilson, N.C.

English led K-State in batting average (.365), hits (66), RBIs (58), doubles (14), home runs (13), total bases (125) and slugging percentage (.691). He only recorded six errors while playing for the Wildcats.

English now plays first base for the Wilson, N.C., Tobs in the northern division of the CPL as part of a summer collegiate league. The league is composed of players from around the country.

While with the Tobs, English has ranked second in the CPL in doubles (9), fifth in batting average (.330), first in RBIs (22) and hits (32), second in slugging percentage (.515) and first in extra-base hits (12).

Basketball needs supportive fans

Williams' dilemma shows programs prosper if people interact with team, coach

Roy Williams did the unthinkable Thursday night.

In an age when big-time athletes and coaches consider money and power before loyalty, Williams placed his players and fans before all else.

Granted, no one could really have blamed Williams if he would have chosen to move back home. Both of his children attend the University of North Carolina, and his wife still has family residing there.

But Williams considered these things to be unimportant when he contemplated the invitation from Dean Smith, former UNC head men's basketball coach.

Williams had worked hard to develop a program the fans could support. He had worked hard to develop a program that attracts some of the best prep players in the country.

The reward for Williams' hard work was these who fell to their knees and begged for him to stay.

And maybe the dilemma Williams faced last week should be a lesson for both K-State basketball fans and head men's coach Jim Wooldridge.

The lesson for the fans is simple. They can not expect a basketball program to prosper if their only interaction with the game is reading the box scores in the paper the next day.

Look at what Williams had to choose from. Packed field houses at both KU and UNC, and schools that can almost recruit star prep players with their mascots alone.

It's easy for an athletic program to be successful when the fans already believe the program is a success. That's the biggest thing KU basketball has going for it right now. No matter how good the program really is, the KU fans always believe they have the best team in the country.

K-State basketball used to be among one of the most successful programs in the country. Then, Lon Kruger left for Florida, and the support of the fans left with him. When K-State brought in Dana Altman, and then Tom Asbury, to run the program, it seemed as if the fans were waiting for these two to prove themselves. In the end, they failed to win the support of the fans or the players.

The success of a program relies on the ability of a coach to recruit players. Quality players aren't going to go to a school where the gym is only filled to 25 percent of capacity.

One of the most important things Wooldridge needs right now is support from the fans. He has a long road ahead of him.

I can't begin to imagine what it must feel like to be in the shadows of both K-State football and KU basketball — to know that when the football season ends, all eyes turn east to Roy and his boys.

But Wooldridge can overcome that obstacle. K-State fans are ready for a successful basketball program. They're ready to root for one of their own, like fans root for Williams.

They're ready for post-season play, even if it is the NIT. They're ready for some national recognition. They're ready for the K-State men's basketball program of old.

It's going to take work from both sides before K-State men's basketball does resemble programs of years past.

The fans will have to prove to Wooldridge that they are behind him. They will have to fill Bramlage Coliseum. They will also have to be patient. Success isn't going to come over night, and they can't give up on the team after only one year.

In turn, Wooldridge will have to prove that K-State has a men's team deserving of support. He will have to be open and honest. He will have to recruit players who perform not only on the court, but off the court as well. He will have to be patient because support won't come over night.

Maybe K-State will drop a couple more games to KU in Bramlage before it is all said and done. And the team will finish the year under .500, without a shot at post-season play.

But remember, this is a rebuilding year — for Wooldridge and K-State fans. Both will have to begin sometime, and this year is as good as any.

100 charred bodies discovered; more missing in pipeline fire

By GILBERT DA COSTA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ABUJA, Nigeria — The charred corpses of 100 villagers — many of them schoolchildren — were discovered and many other people were believed missing after a damaged gasoline pipeline exploded in southern Nigeria, witnesses said Tuesday.

A reporter for Lagos' Daily Times newspaper, Sola Adebayo, said he counted 100 bodies at the scene of the blast near the villages of Adeje and Odiri-Court in the oil-rich Niger Delta. He said many of the dead were young children wearing school uniforms.

The blast occurred Monday. Dan Akpele, a local farmer near Oviri-Court, said he heard a loud explosion and saw swarms of people running and screaming.

"There was total confusion. We were all shocked and confused," Akpele said in a telephone interview. "I just thank God all 13 of my children are safe."

The cause of the accident remained unclear, but witnesses speaking on condition of anonymity said the pipeline had been punctured by vandals. Children and adults alike flocked to the area to gather fuel in buckets and sell it along roadsides, the witnesses added.

A government statement issued late Monday said several lives were lost and a vital petroleum products pipeline destroyed.

"The government sympathizes with the families of those who lost their lives in the incident," the statement said.

The explosion occurred close to the town of Jesse, where more than 700 people died in a similar disaster in late 1998.

A reporter, who returned Tuesday morning from the scene, said some officials believed the initial pipeline leak was caused by vandals who punctured the pipeline with sharp tools.

Pipeline sabotage is common in poverty-wracked Nigeria, and vandals have triggered numerous explosions in the past. At least 497 cases of vandalism were recorded last year, according to the state petroleum company — each forcing costly shutdowns and repairs.

Some cases of sabotage are carried out by militant activists trying to force the government and oil companies to compensate communities for land use and alleged pollution. In other cases, villagers break open the pipeline and collect the gushing fuel to make a crude mixture of oil and gasoline for cheap generators and other motors.

Nigeria is the world's sixth-largest oil exporter, accounting for about one-twelfth of the oil imported by the United States. Sales of crude oil account for more than 80 percent of the government's revenue, and disruptions caused by sabotage are especially painful at a time when oil prices have skyrocketed from 1998 lows.

The government statement said Nigeria has spent enormous resources to educate people about the need to protect installations and oil pipelines so as to avoid these tragic accidents which have always resulted in loss of lives and property.

Country Stampede entertainer returns to Manhattan for concert

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Country music singer Dustin Evans will be caged in Aggieville.

Evans and his band the Good Times will put on "Concert in the Cage" in the empty lot across from Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon from 9 to 11 p.m. Thursday.

Pete Anderson, manager of Chance, said Evans has always put on a good show, and he expects the night to be a success.

"He has a real good following, and he's popular around here," he said.

Although Evans focuses on country music, he sometimes plays other types of music that could appeal to wider audiences, Anderson said.

Evans has been a favorite at Country Stampede for several years and has played at other Aggieville bars.

Gates will open for the concert at 8 p.m. It costs $5 for people 21 and older and $10 for people 18 to 21.

Women drives into river, kills 3, herself

By JESSICA FARGEN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa — A woman distraught over marital troubles packed her three children in a pickup truck and drove it into the Missouri River, killing them all.

Authorities first believed that two children had been killed in Monday's crash, but divers found a body of a third child in the waters Tuesday morning.

"Certainly her intent was she was going to commit suicide and take the children with her," Police Sgt. R.L. Mabbitt said. "It was not an accident."

Karen Duncan left a suicide note for her husband, Chris Duncan, at the couple's house in Council Bluffs, Mabbitt said. In it, she said she was upset over the couple's problems. The final line of the note read: "Your children will be in God's hands now."

Besides Duncan, 4-year-old twins Darrick and Dillon and 8-year-old Zachary were killed.

Lockerbie trial witness struggles with memory of identifying suspect

By JEROME SOCOLOVSKY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMP ZEIST, Netherlands — A Maltese shopkeeper testified in the Lockerbie trial Tuesday that he sold a Libyan defendant the clothes found in the suitcase bomb that destroyed Pan Am 103 and killed 270 people.

Toni Gauci, proprietor of Mary's House shop in the Mediterranean resort of Sliema, testified in the trial of two alleged Libyan intelligence officer accused of blowing up the plane over Lockerbie, Scotland, on Dec. 21, 1988.

Prosecutors say the bomb detonated 38 minutes after the plane's takeoff from London's Heathrow airport.

The plane started its journey in Malta, where the defendants worked in the Libyan Arab Airlines offices.

According to the indictment, defendant Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi entered Gauci's family-run business on Dec. 7, 1988, and purchased items that were packed around the bomb inside a Samsonite suitcase.

Addressing the court in Maltese, Gauci said he remembered a Libyan man entering the boutique and concluded it must have been about a fortnight before Christmas because he remembered other shops were being adorned with Christmas lights.

Gauci, 56, was asked if he recognized the man who bought the clothing.

"That gentleman over there," Gauci said. He pointed to al-Megrahi after going over likenesses he helped police artists compose about a year after the bombing.

In cross examination, though,

Gauci admitted that in November 1991 he picked out a photo of a different suspect and told police at the time, "Of all the photos I have been shown, this photo ... is the only one that is really similar to the man who bought the clothing."

Defense attorney Richard Keen noted that that photograph showed Mohammed Abu Talb, an Egyptian-born Palestinian jailed in Sweden for terrorist bombings in Europe.

An early suspect in the Lockerbie investigations, Abu Talb was also sighted in Malta in the fall of 1988.

The client bought a jacket, two pajamas, a baby suit, two shirts, two pullovers, two trousers and an umbrella, Gauci said.

"It wasn't important for him what he was buying," Gauci said. "When I asked him whether he wanted to try on the trousers, he said it wasn't for him."

Gauci is one of the strongest links in the prosecution case against al-Megrahi and co-defendant Lamien Khalifa Fhimah. They surrendered last year for trial before a Scottish court in the Netherlands, following nearly a decade of international sanctions against Libya.

The two men have pleaded innocent to charges of murder and conspiracy to murder. When the trial opened on May 3, defense lawyers said they would seek to incriminate Palestinian groups in the terrorist attack.

If convicted, the defendants face a maximum life sentence in a Scottish prison.

Gauci testified as the trial resumed following a one-week break to give prosecutors a chance to examine recently submitted defense witness statements.

Pentagon prepares for critical test of national missile defense system

By DAVID BRISCOE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — The Pentagon is doing a second-by-second analysis of the latest test failure of its proposed national missile defense system, as it prepares for what has become an even more critical test as early as October.

"We're going to press forward," said Lt. Col. Rick Lehner, spokesman for the troubled program. "This particular malfunction doesn't do anything to degrade our confidence in the overall technology that's been developed."

Defense Secretary William Cohen, in Beijing for a meeting with Chinese defense chief Gen. Chi Haotian on Wednesday, said the second failed test out of three was disappointing but does not mean the Clinton administration will give up the goal of having the system ready to defend against incoming missiles by 2005.

Cohen said he will tell the Chinese, who oppose the U.S. system, that both a national missile defense and regional missile defenses are needed to counter a proliferation of missile technology.

When he returns, Cohen is to appear before the Senate Armed Services Committee to defend the program before Congress for the first time. The committee chairman, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said Congress would conduct an in-depth analysis of the latest tests.

The next test of the system designed to knock incoming missiles out of the sky with an unarmed kill vehicle is set for October or November and will be similar to the one that had a double failure Saturday.

The interceptor vehicle failed to separate from its second-stage booster, and a decoy balloon from the incoming rocket, designed to deceive the interceptor, failed to inflate.

"It would have been desirable to have two successful intercepts, but it doesn't mean the technology is not there yet," Cohen said en route to Beijing, adding that he remains convinced a national missile shield is needed.

Cohen said he had not decided whether to recommend that President Clinton proceed with construction for the system's ground-based radar in Alaska — the next step in a plan for 100 missiles to protect against limited nuclear attack from present or future enemies or terrorists.

Rep. Curt Weldon, a House Armed Services subcommittee chairman, agreed.

"Should it slow down where we're going? No. Will it? Probably," said Weldon, R-Pa., chairman of the military research and development subcommittee.

Weldon accused Clinton of not really supporting the system and predicted he'd use the booster failure as an excuse for not going ahead.

Also on Capitol Hill, Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio, asked the Pentagon inspector general to investigate the failure of a decoy balloon in Saturday's test. That would have made the test suspect even if it had succeeded, Kucinich said. In an interview, he said the Pentagon knows the system can't tell a decoy from a real incoming missile.

"The American people deserve an investigation of this matter to determine whether the performance failure of the balloon decoy was indeed the result of a technical malfunction," Kucinich said in a letter to the inspector general. He and 50 other House Democrats earlier asked the FBI to investigate allegations by some scientists that the tests were rigged.

John Isaacs, president of the anti-nuclear Council for a Livable World, said Tuesday that the test failure should "slow the program down significantly. ... The bottom line is that the national missile defense is still not ready for prime time."

4-day camp develops high school, middle school girls' skills

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Echoes of "Go, Fight, Win" could be heard well outside the doors of Ahearn Field House on Tuesday morning.

Inside, the sound came from the combined voices of more than 300 cheerleaders participating in the daily "Cheer and Chant" session of the National Cheerleading Association's four-day camp at K-State.

Wearing solid colored cotton shorts and ribbons in their hair, members of the 33 cheer squads from about 20 high schools and a few middle schools grouped together to mimic three NCA instructors who directed them from portable bleachers.

By the camp's end, the campers will hold signs over their heads during this cheer.

But for now, they're mastering the basics.

"We can learn so much in the short time here," said Melissa Eaton, cheerleader from LaFayette High School in St. Joseph, Mo., during a quick break from practicing the cheer.

"There are a lot of things we wouldn't learn if we weren't here," she said.

Robert Garner, camp instructor, said the entire curriculum of the camp aims to develop the whole cheerleader.

"It's designed to teach cheer, chant and dance for the school year," Garner said.

Aside from teaching skills, Garner said this year the camp is focusing on other areas, such as attitude, leadership, teamwork and values.

"There's a word of the day," Garner said. "Today it's 'values,' and we do activities on the area."

Garner has been instructing the NCA camps throughout the summer at other colleges in Kansas and Missouri.

"I'm worn out now, but I'm in it for the kids," Garner said. "They keep me going."

The campers have kept to a busy schedule since their arrival on Monday.

They wake up in the mornings to a conditioning session called cheer aerobics.

Throughout the mornings, they perform partner jumps and stunts, attend pyramid class and learn cheers and chants.

After lunch, the cheer squads meet with their designated NCA cheer instructors for an informal evaluation.

After dinner there is a more formal evaluation where cheerleaders earn red, blue or white ribbons based on their evaluations.

"Getting evaluated on cheers we learned the day before makes me nervous," Eaton said.

The days end with bleacher mania, which gives campers ideas for pep assemblies at their schools.

Jennifer Schlicht and Sunday Potts, cheerleading coaches at Bonner Springs (Kan.) High School, said their two squads are looking forward to today, which is fun day.

"It's like Halloween," Potts said. Our varsity squad is dressing up like cowboys, and they will give licorice to everyone."

When the camp ends on Thursday there will be final evaluations and a competition to determine a team champion.

"We have a lot of fun with the girls and they work hard to get here and spend a lot of time preparing," Potts said.

MICHAEL YOUNG/COLLEGIAN

Working to develop teamwork, cheerleaders gather with their cheerleading squads during practice Tuesday evening in Ahearn Field House.

Cheerleading squad seeks new coach

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A search is under way to find a new head cheerleading coach.

Max Urlick, athletics director, said they are no longer advertising for the position, and that they have a group of candidates for the position.

"I think we have a good group; a good field of candidates to choose from," he said. "I'm excited about finding someone and getting this search over with."

Stefanie Howard, junior in elementary education and third-year cheerleader, said she is excited about the search.

"I'm excited, because I hope they find someone that has college experience and can bring new ideas to our squad," she said.

Howard said having a coach with college experience makes a key difference.

"The biggest thing is having college cheerleading experience," she said. "That way, they can teach us new things."

Sharon Rebel, former coach, decided to take a non-coaching job within K-State, leaving squad members with a temporary coach for the summer. Hope Harris, former K-State cheerleader, is filling in as head coach until the position is filled and will accompany the team to their cheerleading camp in San Marcos, Texas, later this month.

Officials remove 159 dogs from closed Kansas kennel

ELLSWORTH, Kan. — More than 150 dogs — some trapped in their own waste — were removed from a home outside a central Kansas town, in what animal inspectors say was the state's largest animal seizure in recent years.

The dogs were found restrained in unventilated buildings and without adequate food and water. Several needed medical care, inspectors said.

The Kansas Animal Health Department in Topeka ordered the emergency seizure after checking the property to ensure the kennel had been shut down.

Kathy Weatherly's kennel license was revoked earlier this year. In May, she was ordered to reduce the number of animals at her property from 119 to less than 20.

Some puppies couldn't stand and were trapped in their own feces and urine. Another dog went blind from an eye infection, and others were unresponsive.

NATIONAL

1 dead, 2 still missing after pair of buildings collapse

NEW YORK — One body was discovered Wednesday in the wreckage of a pair of collapsed buildings where three people had been feared trapped.

The body was found beneath four feet of "very tightly packed rubble" by firefighters who had burrowed into the debris, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said.

The search effort was expected to continue into the night, he said.

The mayor said authorities believed a gas explosion was likely to blame, although the investigation was continuing. KeySpan Energy had said its workers found no evidence of a gas leak.

With big crops looming, USDA lowers estimates

WASHINGTON D.C. — Big crops in the United States and overseas are pushing down grain and soybean prices for a third straight year, the government said Wednesday.

The Agriculture Department lowered its price estimates for corn, soybeans and wheat because of sagging world markets.

USDA said farmers should get an average of $1.70 per bushel for their corn this year, 15 cents less than its projection last month and 10 cents below the price that growers got for last year's crop.

The estimate for wheat also is down 15 cents, to $2.50 a bushel, from the June forecast. That's the same price growers got for their 1999 crop. The projection for soybeans is off 10 cents from June's estimate, to $4.40 a bushel, and down 25 cents from last year's average.

Taliban rulers remove ban to allow women to work again

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Afghanistan's Taliban militia rulers agreed Wednesday to rescind a new edict barring women from working for international relief agencies, a senior U.N. official said after a day of negotiations in southern Afghanistan.

Upon his return to neighboring Pakistan, Eric de Mul, the U.N. coordinator for Afghanistan, told The Associated Press that "quietly things will return to normal, Afghan women can return to work."

The return may be staggered, de Mul said, but Afghan women who were forced off the job last weekend will be allowed back. He said he received his assurances from Taliban Foreign Minister Wakil Ahmed Muttawakil.

The announcement came on the same day that the Taliban freed Mary Mackmakim, an American aid worker who had been held in a juvenile detention center since Sunday.

Safari Jack's

Aggieville's new bar takes a look at Manhattan's 'wild side'

The tail end of an airplane protrudes over the entrance, and straw covers the overhang. Taxidermied animals fill the inside.

It's all part of the theme and atmosphere that Safari Jack's Watering Hole co-owner Wade Phillips is looking for.

"We wanted to do something different, not just four walls and a bar," he said. "We're trying to create an environment that's unique and that will bring in other people than just college students to it."

Taxidermied animals are just the beginning of the look. Depending on how many they can fit in, Safari Jack's, formerly Lucky Brewgrille, will have between 45 and 60 taxidermied animals. Phillips said they have around 60 animal obtained through the Internet and auctions.

The animals will be placed throughout the bar on the floors, on top of straw huts and along the walls. The look, he said, will be similar to that of a Bass Pro Shop, but with an African feel to it.

Besides the animals, there will also be bamboo poles and a straw hut, where the dance floor is located. A second bar has been added to the main inside area, and another bar will be outside on the patio.

Also outside will be a movie theater with a nearly 200-inch screen. Phillips said they will probably establish movies on Sunday and Monday nights.

"We're trying to replace the old $1 theater in Aggieville, because I miss that a lot," he said. "We'll play old classics — 'Top Gun,' 'Animal House' and maybe some newer releases."

Phillips and co-owner Jeff Mathis had planned to open the bar Saturday, but due to further renovations, they have postponed the opening until around July 23-29.

"Right now we're just playing it by ear, working literally from 7 a.m. to midnight. Basically, we'll open as soon as we can, because we aren't making a dime right now. We just keep making more and more improvements, but we hope to make it a better place because of the delay," Phillips said.

Phillips and Mathis decided to co-own the bar after Luckys closed June 1 due to 15 liquor violations.

"We're very, very excited," Phillips said.

"We also own Pro Fitness here in Aggieville, and we're just excited for a change of pace and to still be doing stuff in Aggieville. It also allows me to run back and forth managing these places."

Phillips said that when Safari Jack's opens, its tentative hours will be 11 a.m. to 2 a.m., with dining hours until around 9 or 10 p.m. It will serve a variety of foods, including steak, hamburgers and appetizers. The specialty, however, will be buffalo meat.

Phillips said the drink specials are still being planned, but that whatever they are, they will be consistent throughout the week.

"We'll try to establish some daily specials and stick to those so everyone will know they can come to Safari Jack's and get that special on that day of the week," he said.

After 10 p.m., a disc jockey will play a mix of music, including rock and alternative, similar to music played in Luckys, Phillips said. Before 10 p.m., the music will be mellow and not as loud.

A pool table and several video games will be available at the bar.

Recent attacks show nationwide increase in violence in youth sports, officials say

By AMANDA RIDDLE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — A youth baseball coach turned himself in Wednesday to face charges he broke an umpire's jaw. The arrest comes a week after a coach was fatally beaten by a father during a youth hockey game in Massachusetts.

Officials, parents and sports administrators say the cases highlight a nationwide increase in youth sports violence, particularly against game officials.

"There's a definite trend toward more violence and more pressure on the game officials," said Ron Allen, assistant commissioner with the Florida High School Activities Association. "I'm talking about players, I'm talking about parents and spectators."

Orlando Lago, 36, assistant baseball coach with the Hollywood Police Athletic League, was charged with aggravated battery. Police say he broke umpire Tom Dziedzinski's jaw during a game against Flanagan Connie Mack PAL. Both teams are composed of top high school players.

The June 19 fight stemmed from a disputed call by Dziedzinski.

Steve Burk, Lago's attorney, said his client didn't provoke the fight.

"He feels terrible that the incident took place," Burk said of Lago, who was released on $5,000 bond without entering a plea.

In the Reading, Mass., case, a father of four died Friday two days after a brawl with another father.

Michael Costin, 40, was beaten unconscious in front of young hockey players he was coaching. Thomas Junta, 42, pleaded innocent to manslaughter in Costin's death. Junta's lawyer said his client was acting in self-defense.

That fight apparently started after a dispute over rough play on the ice during a game that was supposed to be non-contact.

In the case here, a player for Lago's team was called out by Dziedzinski attempting to steal third.

According to police, Lago argued with Dziedzinski near the pitcher's mound, saw Dziedzinski draw his hand back to signal that he was ejecting him and thought the umpire was going to punch him. That's when he swung.

"I just didn't see this coming or expect it," Dziedzinski said Wednesday, his jaw still wired shut. Dziedzinski said the assault was his first while umpiring.

Dziedzinski declined to comment further, referring all questions to his attorney, Kevin Kuliz.

The National Association of Sports Officials in Racine, Wis., receives two or three calls a week from officials assaulted by an angry parent or spectator, spokesman Bob Still said.

The cases range from name-calling and pushing and shoving to officials' vehicles being run off the road by irate parents. He said even the verbal abuse has gotten more vicious.

"We've always had 'four-eyes,'" he said. "The tenor of the type of abuse we're receiving nowadays has become much more personal, much more physical, and highly violent."

None of the agencies that monitor sports violence could provide comparisons with past years.

Efforts are being made to stop the violence before it starts.

The association this year published "When They're In Your Face And How To Deal With It," a brochure to help officials handle out-of-control parents.

Jupiter Tequesta Athletic Association, located 15 miles north of West Palm Beach, requires parents to take a sportsmanship class and sign an ethics code before their kids can play ball.

Fourteen states, including Massachusetts, have laws that allow for stiffer penalties if an official is assaulted, Still said. Georgia Gov. Roy Barnes signed a similar bill into law July 1.

Florida state Rep. Eleanor Sobel, D-Hollywood, plans to sponsor similar legislation next year.

Equestrian team coach announced

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Athletics Director Max Urlick announced Wednesday the head coach for the inaugural equestrian team, which will begin varsity competition this fall.

Teresa Douthit, graduate teaching assistant in animal science, has been developing the equestrian club team since last year. She said she is ready for varsity status.

"I'm excited about the opportunity that Max has given me to head this program," she said. "I think equestrian will be a great thing for Kansas State, and I'm just happy to be a part of it."

Douthit has been a horse-show judge and clinician since 1996 in Kansas and Missouri, where her duties included serving as an official judge for statewide open, club and 4-H shows.

She also conducted horsemanship clinics and skills tests for the Kansas 4-H program and presented demonstrations on judging and showing stock-horse types in all events.

Douthit received her undergraduate degree at K-State in 1999. She is going into her second year of work on her master's degree and plans to graduate in May 2001.

Israel cancels arms sale to China before summit

By PAULINE JELINEK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — Israel called off a planned military sale to China, heading off more American criticism of the deal, as it entered the second day of U.S.-brokered peace talks with Palestinians.

Prime Minister Ehud Barak informed President Clinton at the Mideast summit in nearby Maryland that he was canceling a planned quarter-billion-dollar sale of an advanced airborne radar warning system to China, officials announced Wednesday.

The White House said it was pleased, and a U.S. congressman dropped his plan to ask the House later Wednesday to punish Israel by withholding some of its aid money.

Analysts said it was a wise move by Israel to get the contentious issue out of the way and improve chances for continued American good will during the difficult peace process.

"We welcome the decision," White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said. "We are pleased to see they have taken our security concerns into account in making this decision."

Barak's spokesman, Gadi Baltiansky, said the prime minister had "expressed sorrow" in a letter to Chinese President Jiang Zemin that the sale had been scuttled.

"Israel is right now together with the United States in the midst of an effort to achieve historic decisions relating to her vital interests," Baltiansky said.

While Baltiansky did not say explicitly that Israel had yielded to U.S. pressure, he said the step was taken against the background of American objections to the deal.

"This was a very, very smart thing for them to do," Brookings Institution Middle East fellow Shibley Telhami said of Israel. "There's no question that even aside from the summit, this has been a huge contentious issue that Israel would have had to resolve sooner or later."

Getting it out of the way now, Telhami said, was important to maintain American good will as Israel attempts to complete a peace plan that now depends on U.S. diplomatic help and later could depend on U.S. economic aid.

Gap, GapKids to open in Manhattan Town Center in September

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the nation's most popular clothing stores is scheduled to open its doors in Manhattan Sept. 1.

Manhattan Town Center will be home to Gap and GapKids, and will be the mall's fourth-largest store.

The Manhattan store, however, won't be like most Gap stores.

"There are only nine other Gap stores like this one in the country," said Randy Crow, marketing director for Manhattan Town Center. "It will have a whole new look."

Crow said specifics on the store's new look will remain a secret for now.

"It's a very unique opportunity for Manhattan to have a brand new Gap store," Crow said. "We're looking forward to this tremendously."

Gap and GapKids will be across from Waldenbooks and extend from Kitchen Capers to Coachhouse Gifts on the Dillard's wing of the mall.

Crow said the store is coming to Manhattan after numerous requests from people in the community.

Manhattan Town Center's parent company, Forest City, of Cleveland, thought Manhattan was an ideal location for a Gap.

"They looked at Manhattan's diverse population," Crow said. "Also, there's always people coming in and going out of here to all places."

Crow said Gap opened 1,500 new stores worldwide this year and the stores are requested everywhere.

To receive more information about Gap, Crow said the store will be promoting its opening at Purple Power Play on Poyntz Aug. 31 and Sept. 1.

Crow said Gap is not hiring yet, but they will be conducting interviews shortly.

Those seeking jobs at Manhattan's Gap can contact the store through its Web site.

"Everyone should stay tuned because there will be more information available soon," Crow said.

Pipeline-explosion victims buried

By FRANK AIGBOGUN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OVIRO-COURT, Nigeria — Firefighters tried to douse burning pools of gasoline Wednesday, struggling to extinguish a pipeline fire as villagers whisked away and buried bodies to avoid police retribution.

While exactly what set off Monday's explosion remains unclear, company officials blamed a fuel-smuggling ring. Witnesses have counted more than 100 bodies, but the true death toll might never be known as relatives sneak away with corpses to keep police from identifying the vandals and searching their homes.

The flames flared up again Wednesday after dying down during overnight rains. Clouds of black smoke hung over the area, near the villages of Adeje and Oviro-Court in the oil-rich Niger Delta. The pipeline was carrying gasoline from a refinery in Warri to northern Nigeria.

Few of the reported 100 injured were taken to the hospital. Many others were being treated at home because they feared arrest. In the past, the government has prosecuted and threatened to shoot pipeline vandals.

The tragedy resembled an accident in nearby Jesse, where more than 700 people were killed in October 1998. The government has since tried to educate villagers about the danger of "scooping," the illegal practice of scavenging fuel from pipelines.

Stephen Edebia, 14, of Adeje, said his brother was killed collecting fuel despite numerous warnings.

"My mother had been telling him to stop the petrol business but he would not hear," Edebia said. "The money he was making used to help us in the family. But now that he is dead that money is gone."

Edorah Agbah, a state petroleum company spokesman, blamed the tragedy on villagers.

The pipeline has been sabotaged seven times since January in the same spot, he said, explaining that many villagers in Oviro-Court had fuel tanks behind their huts to store the fuel.

Witnesses said the pipeline had been punctured days earlier. Children and adults flocked to the area each day from surrounding villages to gather the gasoline and sell it along roadsides, the witnesses added.

President Olusegun Obasanjo's spokesman, Doyin Okupe on Tuesday said greedy business operators were encouraging pipeline vandalism.

"It is driven by poverty and greed," Okupe said. "They know the risks."

3 fast-food employees killed in apparent robbery

By VICKI BROWN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMYRNA, Tenn. — Three fast-food workers were found shot to death Wednesday in an apparent robbery.

The shootings apparently happened after Captain D's closed at midnight, Sgt. Scott Byers said.

The first body was found about 2:30 a.m. in the driver's seat of a car outside a BigK discount store behind the restaurant. Signs that the man worked at Captain D's led police there, where the bodies of two more men were found in a cooler.

The victims' families met Wednesday morning with police and grief counselors. The body of William Troy Snell, 18, was found in the car outside the store. Manager Scott Myers, 42, was also killed. The third man's identity has not been released.

Betty Marshall, spokeswoman for Shoney's, the parent company of Captain D's, called the shootings "a terrible tragedy."

Marshall would not discuss the security at Captain D's or the company's other restaurants, saying it might jeopardize the police investigation.

Abe Hasan, owner of the BP Oil station next door to Captain D's, said police asked for the tapes from video cameras inside the store and at the gas pumps for possible clues.

He said when he left the station at 11:30 p.m., "I saw nothing unusual."

Tobacco attorneys urge jury to deny smokers' request for billions in punitive damages

By CATHERINE WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Tobacco attorneys urged a jury Wednesday not to make "instant millionaires" out of hundreds of thousands of sick Florida smokers with a ruinous verdict against the industry.

The 300,000 to 700,000 smokers are asking for up to $196 billion in punitive damages, an amount the nation's five biggest tobacco companies say would break them.

"They can become instant millionaires as a bonus above and beyond fully compensating them for their injuries," attorney Dan Webb said. "In many ways, the future of my client, Philip Morris, and its employees and its stockholders rest in your hands."

The smokers and their chief attorney, Stanley Rosenblatt, are trying to put the tobacco industry out of business, R.J. Reynolds lawyer Jim Johnson told the jury.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco, Lorillard Tobacco and Liggett Group were to give their closing arguments later Wednesday and today. The jury could get the case by the end of the week.

Tobacco attorneys have said $75 million would be a fair verdict; the smokers say $154 billion would be the right amount.

If the jury awarded $75 million, the average smoker would receive about $150 if it were split among 500,000 people. If the jury awarded the $154 billion, the smokers would each receive more than $300,000.

The six jurors already have decided that the industry makes a deadly product and awarded $12.7 million in compensatory damages to three representative smokers.

The industry's main argument is that tobacco companies have changed since states began suing in 1994, and that the $257 billion national settlement is enough.

The case is the first smokers' class-action lawsuit to go to trial and the most serious financial threat to the industry.

The companies have argued that they should not be required to pay more than their combined net worth of $15.3 billion.

Under Florida law, a punitive damages verdict cannot put a company out of business and judges are required to reduce any award that would.

THE ADVENTURE OF A
LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years
to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective -- but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation -- as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try -- you won't regret it.

High temperatures suspected in deaths of elderly couple

COUNCIL GROVE, Kan. — A man and a woman in their 80s found dead in their home may have succumbed to the heat, authorities said.

Lela A. Gaither, 82, and Russell Michaels, 85, were found Thursday morning at their home. Police said Saturday that Wednesday's temperatures in the 90s might have contributed to the deaths.

Authorities went to the home about 10:30 a.m. Thursday and found the bodies, Police Chief Tom Furman said. Foul play was not suspected because the house was secure.

The exact causes of death were to be determined by autopsies, but Furman said he suspected the heat was a contributing factor.

Temperatures hit a high of 96 degrees on Wednesday in Emporia — the nearest National Weather Service recording station to Council Grove. It wasn't clear whether Gaither and Michaels had air conditioning in their house.

Judge accuses White House of withholding information

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A federal judge accused the White House on Monday of keeping him in the dark about how long it would take to restore thousands of lost Clinton administration e-mails.

U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth said the White House never told him that revised estimates for the project were vastly different from what administration lawyers had reported in a lawsuit in the case.

White House officials earlier this year said thousands of e-mails, including some from Vice President Al Gore's office, were not properly archived. As a result, the messages were never reviewed by White House lawyers to determine if they should be turned over to investigators under subpoena in cases ranging from the Monica Lewinsky scandal and Whitewater to campaign fund raising.

Americans obsessively clean, weakening immune systems

ATLANTA — Mom would be proud: All that nagging about washing your hands and cleaning behind the ears finally sank in — perhaps too much.

Some experts say Americans are obsessively clean, coating everything from toothbrush handles to hospital walls with anti-bacterials and snapping up hundreds of new household cleaning products.

The problem is that all that scrubbing and sponging may be weakening our immune systems, killing helpful germs and spurring the growth of mutant strains of super bacteria.

"It's a craze," said Stuart Levy, a Tufts University geneticist who spoke Monday at a conference on new infectious diseases. "The public is just gobbling it up. There was a bandwagon, and it got bigger and bigger and bigger."

SUMMER'S HALFWAY MARK LEAVES STUDENTS TO-DO LIST

The summer is halfway over, Country Stampede has been here and gone and the heat is rising. As a reader's service, here are some things to do in Manhattan for the last half of the summer.

- Take a trip now that gas is under $1.50 again.
- Go check out a blockbuster at the movie theater.
- Rediscover Go Fish — inside an air-conditioned room.
- Go swimming, if you have to be outside.
- Bake cookies — with the air conditioning on high — for your coworkers.
- Go to the Riley County Fair next week.
- Enjoy all the usual accommodations afforded to college students without all the college students here.
- After finishing the Collegian crossword, go buy a book of crosswords and do them — in the air conditioning.
- Go to the mall and spend money you probably don't have.
- Read a book other than a textbook, inside — in the air conditioning.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Columnist ponders 22nd birthday

Today is my birthday, and since I have one more column after this to write before my collegiate career ends, one would think I would use this opportunity to address a few more hard-hitting issues near and dear to my leftist heart. Eh.

It all makes me tired, so instead this will simply be a forum in which I will be stroking my own ego, which I know the campus loves to see on the opinion page. But — before the criticism comes crashing down on my head — you try writing an amusing column for four years and see how entertaining you become by the end. Ah, yes. My birthday. Today I am 22, and I can't help but think back to when I started writing columns for the Collegian when I was 18. It really wasn't all that long ago, but right now, that's about 18 percent of life given so gregariously to column writing. For you — the reader. OK, really for myself so I could try to change K-State's conservative climate.

One of the first columns I wrote was about the now-defunct Dr. Love's, a strip club right outside Manhattan city limits on Kansas Highway 18. I have written about the religious right, about living in Germany, about politics. I have written about many of the issues that are indeed near and dear to my leftist heart, and I realize I will be hard-pressed to find this kind of opportunity again. In other words, I should take my own advice and not waste this column on something stupid. Like Canada.

I love Canada.

I love its flag, its people and their accents, its mild climates, its universal health-care system, and its "The Kids in the Hall." Especially Mark McKinney. Mmm. Oh, and its Barenaked Ladies and its goofy football league. I also love my hot Canadian friend, Chris Rollins. No, there isn't much to not like about Canada.

There isn't much of a column to write about Canada, either, unless I were to write about its health-care system, about which I truly know little. And that would show in the writing, which would lead to the damage of my pristine credibility.

Brad Elder, a graduate teaching assistant in my biology class, has been most insistent that I write a column about the controversies surrounding recent discoveries in genetics. The mapping of the human genome, cloned sheep and the ilk would all make fantastic and scholarly columns, he tells me.

I have to agree with him. However, while I find it flattering that he thinks I actually understand said controversies and would be able to write a convincing opinion, the truth is quite to the contrary. Brad, the bitter truth about this is the same as it is for Canada's health-care system — I just don't know enough about it to write about it. A younger Brandi would have been willing to feign knowledge in order to write the column, but not the older Brandi. Experience has taught me that readers can detect ignorance like Geiger counters and would summarily put the smack down.

In reviewing my column-writing career, I have to question what kind of column writing best suits me. I'm generally all over the place as far as topics are concerned, chastising New York Mayor Rudy

Guiliani one week and discussing the delightful deliciousness of pudding the next. Am I more George Will or more Dave Barry? Can I be both?

It's been a wonderful ride through the annals of my sick mind, and you'll be treated to one more next week.

After that, you're on your own.

Brandi Hertig is 22 years old and a senior in print journalism. You can wish her happy birthday at leighhertig@hotmail.com.

Miranda, Boy Scouts Supreme Court cases interesting

Last week I wrote upon the Supreme Court decision on school prayer. There are two other cases ruled upon this term that are also of great social and cultural interest; Dickerson v. United States, which dealt with the Miranda safeguards, and Boy Scouts of America v. Dale, which dealt with the right of free association.

Dickerson v. United States: In 1963, Ernesto Miranda admitted to kidnapping and rape. However, during his police interrogation, he was denied a lawyer. Then in 1966, in the case Miranda v. Arizona, the Supreme Court threw out Miranda's confession and overturned the conviction.

The high court ruled that being retained by the police is intrinsically intimidating and that those in custody are entitled to know their Constitutional rights.

At the time, the Supreme Court ruling was viewed as an obstacle in convicting the guilty. So in 1968, Congress passed and LBJ signed the Voluntary Confession Law, which states that any voluntary confession, regardless if the Miranda warnings were given, is admissible evidence.

However, most in the police and justice systems believed Miranda warnings were a good idea because they improve police investigative skills and build stronger trial cases.

As it turned out, few cases were ever lost because of a technicality over the Miranda warnings. Miranda himself was retried and still found guilty even without his confession.

Then, in 1997, the First Virginia Bank was robbed, and the police traced it to Charles Dickerson.

At FBI headquarters, Dickerson denied involvement. When informed that there was a search warrant for his apartment, Dickerson voluntarily confessed; only after the confession was Dickerson read his rights.

The original trial threw out the confession, but the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the ruling admitting the evidence under Section 3501. In addition, the court said the Constitution doesn't specifically require the reading of the Miranda warnings, and thus Congress does have the authority to amend them.

When the Supreme Court got a hold of Dickerson v. United States, some justices argued that Miranda v. Arizona was ruled correctly. Others argued that regardless of the correctness of the decision, Miranda has become part of the fabric and culture of our society and should be upheld. In the end, the Supreme Court ruled 7-2 reaffirming Miranda v. Arizona.

Boy Scouts of America v. Dale: Former Eagle Scout James Dale was dismissed as a Boy Scout troop leader for being openly gay. The New Jersey Supreme Court ruled against the BSA for violating the New Jersey law banning discrimination in public accommodations.

In front of the U.S. Supreme Court, Dale's attorneys cited rulings that forced the Rotary International and the Jaycees to admit women and allowed New York City to ban private clubs that discriminate against women and minorities.

The Scouts' attorney cited the 1995 ruling allowing the private sponsor of the Boston St. Patrick's Day Parade to exclude gay groups on the grounds that parades are a "form of expression" and that the sponsor has the right not to express beliefs it doesn't hold.

The Court ruled in favor of the Boy Scouts, because homosexual behavior, although not explicitly banned, is contrary to the organization's implied requirement of being "morally straight" and "clean."

This leaves open the question: could the BSA or some other organization discriminate against Muslims and Jews because they are under the opinion that not believing Jesus Christ is the Savior is immoral?

Moreover, there is a growing body of scientific evidence that homosexuality is not a choice, but a combination of genetics, biochemistry and brain physiology. Could this ruling allow an organization to discriminate against those with epilepsy because it believes that going into seizures is a symptom of possession by the devil?

This is something future courts will have to decide.

Miss America 2000 speaks to soldiers about responsibility of serving country

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a tear in her eye, Miss America 2000, Heather French, spoke to Fort Riley soldiers Monday at a Spiritual Fitness Rally about having a passion for the military, instilled in her by her father, and about looking to the future when they would one day be veterans.

"It's a very big honor to give a piece back to you what my father gave to me," French said to about 1,200 soldiers.

"It was around the age of four when father started taking me to V.A. hospitals and started sharing stories and troubles," she said. "I've developed a strong respect for our nation's military."

She commended troops for their involvement and loyalty, reminding them their duties are well-appreciated.

"There's a difference between having a love for your country and a loyalty to your country," she said.

Boosting morale, speaking to soldiers and advocating bills for the military are a few of the duties she performs for the country, she said. Because of her title, she's able to give many veterans and people in the military a voice they otherwise might not have had.

"That's what the voice of Miss America allows me to do," she said. "[My father] considers it my tour of duty."

Those who French spoke to will be leaving in the next 30-40 days for Kuwait on a mission called Task Force Thunder. The soldiers will be there for about one year, and will be there to accomplish several things.

"Our purpose in deployment is to be a deterrent for any aggression in the region, and so they'll know American troops are already on the ground and waiting; also, to train coalition allies, to train them the same way we train us," said Capt. Lee Magee, logistics officer for Task Force Thunder.

He said they asked Miss America to come to Fort Riley and speak for one main reason.

"We brought Miss America here to try and bump up the moral of soldiers, and to let them know there's someone else out there that cares about them," Magee said.

He said they hoped her speech would be a sort of spiritual booster for the soldiers as well.

After singing "America the Beautiful," she ended her speech.

"If there's one message here I give to you," she said, "it's that the service you do today, you want to make sure every day you do your duty you ask yourself, 'Am I leaving a legacy for my children?' and 'Do they know what it is to fight for their country? Do they know the price that has to be paid?' and every time they see the flag, that it represents not just pretty colors, but that red was the blood that was shed for the people."

"And ask yourself what I ask myself every single day before I go to my job, 'Can I do my job well enough so that one of these days my children can stand up and say my country stand for thee, and say 'I'm proud to be an American, and I'm proud to be an American veteran.'"

French said she decided to make her first trek to Kansas to show the troops her support.

"I wanted to send them off so they know everyone in America is behind them, and to entertain them and let them know we're thinking about them," she said.

Rob Cordray, intelligence officer, said her speech inspired him to think about stories shared by his father who served in the military, giving him a good feeling at the thought of both the past and the future.

"I think she came off very heartfelt and genuine," Cordray said. "I really felt what she gave the soldiers today was a reason to serve."

New, smoke-free restaurant opens with good response; continued success expected

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rusty's Next Door opened July 1 as the only non-smoking bar in Manhattan.

So far, it has been well received by local residents.

"I think it's really popular with the people who don't smoke," said Bill Jacob, an employee at Next Door. "The people that do smoke don't mind going outside to smoke."

Brandi Crum, waitress at Next Door, said the no-smoking policy has helped out in other ways, too.

"The air is a lot cleaner over here," Crum said. "It's also brought in a different crowd. It's an older crowd."

During the summer, Next Door has the same hours as Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. Also like Chance, customers at Next Door are welcome to leave their peanut shells on the floor. Aspects such as these keep Kim Beil, a civil engineer for HWS Consultant, coming to Next Door.

"I like the non-smoking part of it and being able to throw your peanuts on the floor," Beil, of Lincoln, Neb., said. "It's surprising, but I think it's a good sales point. I think they'll do well."

Beil has been in Manhattan for three weeks and said Next Door is a good place to come after work.

"I like it down here because I work hours out in the sun," Beil said. "Then I come and unwind down here."

While Next Door seems to have been a success so far, Crum said business should pick up when the fall semester starts.

"We expect it to get busier this fall," Crum said. "There's more tables than at most places. There's lots of chairs for game days; lots of standing room."

Professor Charles Xavier (Patrick Stewart, left) matches wits with Erik "Magneto" Lehnsherr (Ian McKellen) in "X-Men," a film with appeal beyond the usual comic fanbase.

'X-Men' more than your average comic book film

By KEN WELLS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's never easy to adapt material from other media to the silver screen; a director has to placate the fans of the original story while drawing in a new crowd unfamiliar with the original tale.

However, Bryan Singer's "X-Men" is a two-fold success as both a relatively faithful adaptation of the comic book series and as a pretty decent popcorn flick in its own right.

The setting evokes ghosts of paranoia from the Red Scare. Instead of communists, however, the world is gripped in fear of mutants — people cursed or blessed by genetic quirks which give them abilities not only beyond those of ordinary people, but sometimes beyond their own control. Two old friends lead different fronts of the mutant cause: Professor Charles Xavier (Patrick Stewart) advocates peaceful coexistence and integration of mutants into human society, while Erik Lehnsherr (Ian McKellen), now known as Magneto, champions mutant supremacy — victory through any means necessary. Standing at Xavier's side are Scott "Cyclops" Summers (James Marsden), Jean Grey (Famke Janssen) and Ororo "Storm" Munroe (Halle Berry).

If you're snickering at the cute nicknames, you can relate to Logan (Hugh Jackman), a down-to-earth man who just happens to have an impressive healing ability, retractable and unbreakable claws in his forearms, and a lifetime of memories he can't recall. He accepts this; it's all he's known. It's when he gets thrust into the struggle between Xavier's and Magneto's forces that he sees it all as just a little silly and needs to be sold on the idea — along with the audience.

Singer's directorial choices are well-made. This is not a comic book, or even an action movie — it's quite dramatic with a few action sequences. Gone are the gaudy day-glo spandex outfits — the X-Men wear street clothes as often as possible, to maximum effect, grounding themselves in reality as much as possible. (The Xavier's school sequences show more of the daily school life and the students than the comic generally does.) The action sequences are almost superficial — it's the inner conflicts which are the most interesting of the film. Jackman simply is the Wolverine fans have been howling for. He's the lead actor, and he's always exciting and interesting to watch, capturing the nuances of the feral Logan perfectly. Veteran actors McKellen and Stewart lend weight and power to their characters, their poignant scenes together and the entire movie. Janssen and Marsden fit their roles well (Summers always was a stick in the mud), and Anna Paquin is elegantly vulnerable and distant as Rogue — a girl whose touch could steal a person's life.

The special effects range from the occasionally impressive to the painful — some of the wire effects are downright awful — but are generally well-integrated. There's a touch more violence in here than most parents might expect (Wolverine's claws impale at least four people through the film, one very visibly — something those used to sanitary cartoon violence might be shaken by). And no, this film isn't "American Beauty" — but it's fun.

The true mark of a franchise film's success (and judging from weekend box office figures, this is a franchise in the making) is whether or not non-fans can enjoy it. Those I watched with had never picked up an issue before and still enjoyed themselves, lending me to believe that non-fans will get a kick out of being introduced to this world for the first time.

The World Wrestling Federation returned to Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday, pleasing the masses of fans with title matches and a consistent running banter of trash talk.

"Let's face it, this is a nothing-happening town, and you need somebody to cheer for," Christian, one half of the tag-team champions, said to the crowd.

Edge, the other half of the champions, followed with his thoughts on the night's opponents, the crowd-favorite Dudley Boyz.

"And unfortunately, just like the Kansas City Chiefs and the Kansas City Royals, the Dudleys are losers," Edge said.

While Edge and Christian were able to leave with their tag-team title belts, they couldn't avoid being put through a folding table, the Dudley Boyz' signature move.

Curtis Johnson, 23, of Kansas City, Mo., and a fan of professional wrestling for the past year and a half, said the outcome of the match wasn't much of a surprise.

"It was cool, but it was pretty much expected," Johnson said.

Johnson said he came to the event with a group of friends because he said he enjoyed the entertainment and it made him laugh.

The reasons why people like wrestling were just as diverse as the array of moves that the wrestlers displayed on the mat.

Dale McCumons, 28, of Olathe, Kan., has been a fan of wrestling for about six months since his sister got him interested. He said he loves wrestling because of the fighting.

"I just love the kicking-ass," McCumons said.

Staci Inscoc, 31, of Olathe, Kan., was in attendance for a different reason — to see the men who were going to be in the ring.

"The hot bodies," she said. "I love the hot bodies."

As for action in the ring, everyone who came with a title, left with it. Eddie Guerrero retained his European title by pinning the Big Boss Man. Steve Blackman left again with the Hardcore title and Val Venus took home the Intercontinental Championship.

The crowd-favorite, The Godfather, with his following group of women known as the Ho-Train, might have summed up the night best when he informed his opponent, Gangrel, that he wasn't going to do the norm and offer his opponent one of his women.

"These people don't want to see you leave here with one of these women, The Godfather said. "They came to see me kick your ass."

Air Force ROTC is an elective — but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation — as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try — you won't regret it.

White farmers close down to protest threats, assault

GLENDAL, Zimbabwe — Angry white farmers in this key cotton- and food-producing area shut down operations Tuesday, protesting a lack of help from police during Zimbabwe's 5-month-old land occupation.

Silence fell over normally bustling fields as irrigation sprays were shut off and thousands of cotton pickers and farm hands stopped work. The only ongoing task was the milking of dairy cows.

"We are making this a passive protest to try and get police to react and restore law and order," said Dave Jenkins, a spokesman for 60 farmers in this district 50 miles north of the capital, Harare.

Transportation safety officials hear about distracted drivers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — You're driving and glance over as another car passes. To your amazement, the man behind the wheel is talking on a cellular phone — while shaving.

"We are experiencing a dramatic change in driver behavior," said Rosalyn Millman, deputy administrator for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"If we underestimate this potential risk to highway traffic safety and do not moderate drivers' use of in-vehicle systems, the price may be very steep, indeed."

According to the Network of Employers for Traffic Safety, which has organized a campaign encouraging responsible use of new vehicle technologies, distracted drivers cause at least 4,000 accidents a day and perhaps as many as 8,000.

Nation's blood supply safer because of new genetic tests

ATLANTA — New genetic tests have made the nation's blood supply safer, allowing donation banks to detect viral infections sooner and keep them from slipping into transfusions, scientists said Tuesday.

Dr. Michael Busch of Blood Centers of the Pacific said nucleic acid testing, which can detect tiny amounts of viruses like HIV and hepatitis C even before the body recognizes them, has stopped a significant number of infections.

Traditional testing has depended on antibodies that the immune system develops to fight the virus, but those reactions can take up to 80 days.

Nucleic acid testing, or NAT, has cut that window down to less than 20 days, Busch reported Tuesday at the International Conference on Emerging Infectious Diseases.

Kansans for Life leader retires after 10 years as group's head

WICHITA — The head of the state's most prominent anti-abortion group, Kansans for Life, is stepping down after 10 years.

Membership in Kansans for Life grew from about 250 to tens of thousands during the tenure of David Gittrich. But more importantly, he said, there has been a decline in the number of abortions performed in Wichita and an increase in the number of crisis centers.

But Gittrich, 53, said it is time somebody else led the group although he plans to remain active after his Dec. 1 resignation.

Volleyball camp fills field house

By JIM REINTJES
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first four-day session of the K-State Wildcat Volleyball Camp ended Tuesday at Ahearn Field House.

"Very few understand why you do things relative to volleyball and from that understanding, it makes them better," said Jim McLaughlin, head volleyball coach.

McLaughlin said there were 27 campers in the first camp in 1997, and it has grown since. There were 150 last year and 142 attending each session this year.

"We are going to have the best volleyball camp in the country," he said. "The camp is 10 to 11 times as big as the first year. The growth has been significant."

One camper said she had a good time at the camp, and it was over before she knew it.

"We were upset that it was over," Heather Moore said. "It went by really fast. I learned a lot. We worked on the little, detailed mechanics."

McLaughlin said the camp's goals are for the campers to understand the demands of the game, give them opportunities to respond to situations that occur at a high level of play and to provide a lot of feedback between the campers and coaches.

"Our camp is good, we have a lot of fun and work hard," he said.

He said every minute is accounted for during the four-day session.

"We spend 8 hours a day in the gym. It's hot and sticky, but we keep on teaching," he said. "The demands are significant. It gets them ready for a higher level."

Besides playing a lot of volleyball, there is time for the campers to have fun off the court.

He said the campers put on skits on one night during the session. He said he is amazed at what they come up with and that they are just as serious as they are on the court.

"They make a commitment and get focused," he said.

They get the coaches involved and the parents come and watch the show.

He said the campers come in all shapes and sizes. The campers are junior high through high school senior girls. There was one boy who attended this year.

He said players come from all over Kansas and that he is starting to get players from Nebraska attending the camp.

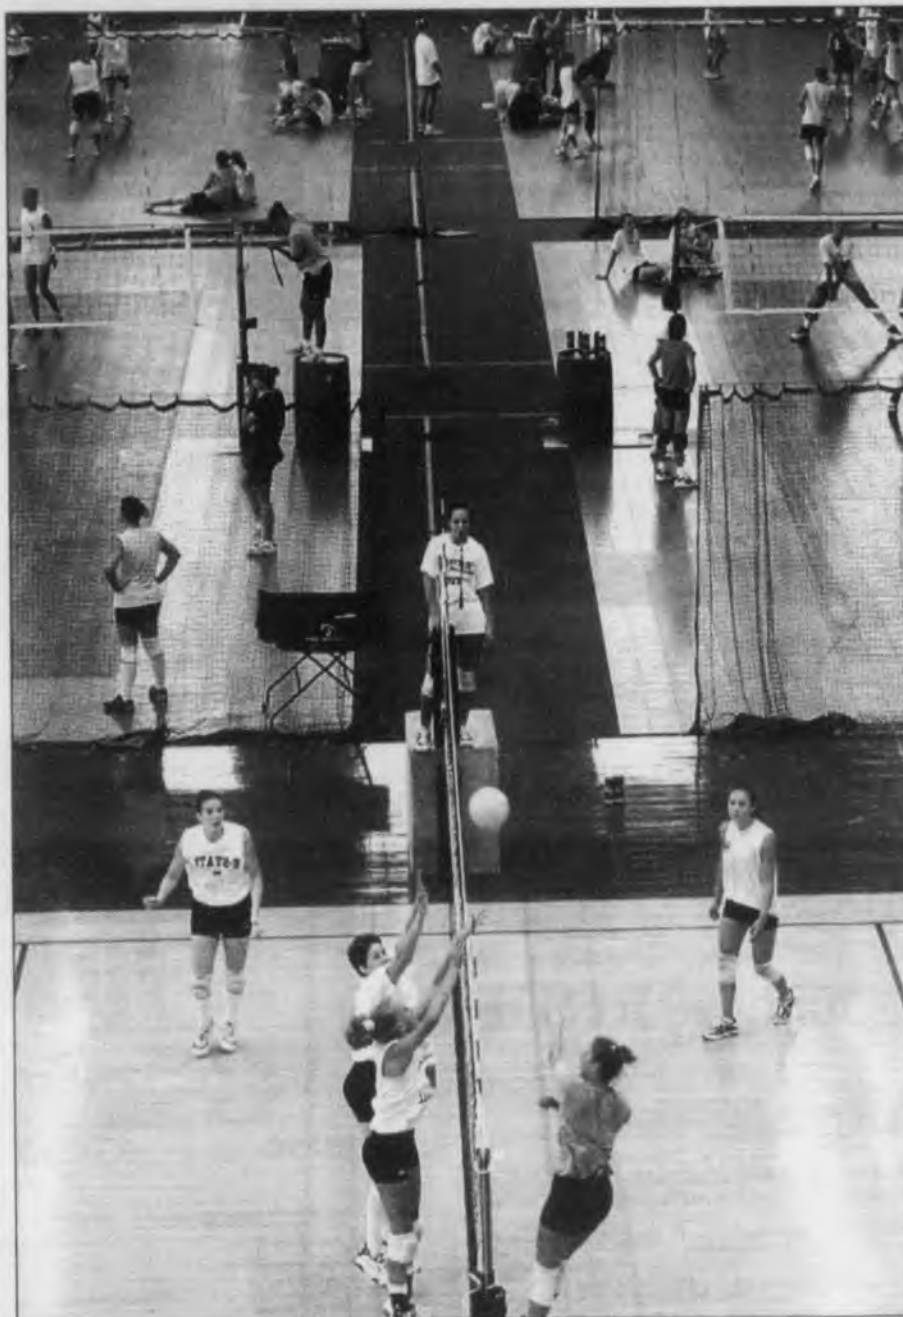

"I had to go tell them to put on purple, but that's OK," he said.

He said he receives a lot of help from Suzie Fritz and Jason Watson, K-State assistant volleyball coaches, when running the camp.

The camp costs $280, which includes room, board and a volleyball. He said some people commute to save a few dollars, but most campers stay overnight.

The camp even has its own camp store, which is in Ford Hall. The store sells T-shirts and volleyball-related items, but the best seller is pizza.

"They go through a lot of pizza," he said.

Equestrian joins list of K-State varsity athletic teams this year

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will have many attractions for its students this fall: a perennial national power in football, a nationally ranked volleyball team, a brand new equestrian program.

That's right — equestrian.

After much debate and discussion in both the athletic department and student body, equestrian has been chosen to fulfill K-State's NCAA Title IX requirements.

Athletics director Max Urick said he made the initial decision, which then was approved by the Intercollegiate Athletic Council and the university administration.

Associate athletic director Lon Floyd said several sports were discussed in a nearly year-long process.

"However, we felt an equestrian team was a good fit for at K-State for a couple of reasons," Floyd said. "One reason was that K-State already has a club team which competes on campus. Also, because of that, we anticipated a lot of support for the sport. So far, we haven't been disappointed."

Head coach Teresa Douthit said the response has been mixed, but is still pleased.

"I think some people who wanted a different sport may be a little sour," Douthit said. "But there has been tremendous support from the alumni and lots of interest from potential team members."

Interest in the program has not been limited to within the state of Kansas. Floyd said he has been contacted by interested people from Texas, Colorado and Missouri.

Another distinctive aspect about the equestrian program at K-State will be its relationship with the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

"It will be in a cooperative effort with the animal science department," Floyd said. "They will be very active in its success."

Urick said equestrian would be the only sport at K-State with a direct alliance to academic areas.

With an expected 40-110 member team, Douthit said she encourages any and every interested female student to come out.

"I want to emphasize that no experience is needed," Douthit said. "You also don't have to be an animal science major to come out."

Douthit said there will be informational meetings at the beginning of the fall semester, with practices starting up shortly after.

The team will practice at Weber Hall and use private facilities in the area. While the team will not actually be host to competition this season, plans for future facilities are in the works. An EquiCenter is in its initial planning stages.

Floyd said finances for the facility primarily would come from fundraising and the animal science department.

"We anticipate that it should put us in an excellent position to compete with anyone in the nation, as far as facilities go," Floyd said.

Floyd said different levels of riders are judged at competitions. Beginning riders as well as the more experienced riders can compete at varsity competitions. He said this flexibility of the sport makes it attractive.

"This allows girls of all ability levels to compete at the varsity levels," Floyd said.

Thank you CNS.

Plane crash in India kills 56

By INDRANIL SINGH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PATNA, India — Aviation experts on Tuesday investigated whether a sudden burst of wind may have pushed down an aging Boeing jetliner that crashed into a housing complex, killing 56 people.

A government-owned Alliance Air's Boeing 737-200 crashed into the complex while trying to land at Patna airport on Monday, killing 51 aboard the plane and five people on the ground.

Seven people on the plane survived.

Doctors at the Patna Medical College worked with relatives of the dead Tuesday to identify nine bodies kept under blocks of ice in the mortuary.

A judge was named to head an expert team to investigate the crash, while aviation officials dismissed doubts about the airworthiness of the plane, which was 20 years old and due to be phased out of the fleet in two years.

Engineers have recovered the data and cockpit recorders. Analysis of the data could help experts determine if wind shear — a sudden change in wind direction — caused the plane to suddenly lose altitude, The Hindustan Times newspaper reported Tuesday.

P.T. Bopanna, an engineer who survived the crash, told reporters that the plane lurched and wobbled before it went down.

When wind shear occurs, a sudden gust of air moving toward the ground initially pushes the aircraft forward, prompting some pilots to reduce engine speed. The air current then pushes the plane toward the ground. The phenomenon occurs especially during takeoffs and landings.

It was not clear whether the Alliance Air jet had equipment to detect wind shear, which is provided in the latest aircraft.

But the paper also quoted an unidentified pilot as saying that the pilot of the aircraft may have increased speed while making a 180-degree turn, causing the plane to stall and drop down. Government aviation officials were not immediately available for comment.

On Monday, Civil Aviation Ministry secretary A.H. Jung said the flight's pilot, Capt. Sohan Pal, may have been flying too low as he made his second approach to Patna.

Meanwhile, Indian Airlines, which owns Alliance Air, insisted the Boeing 737 was fully airworthy. The plane — which was delivered in 1980 and logged 44,000 flight hours, according to Boeing — was upgraded in January.

"It's not a question of whether an aircraft is old or new. What counts is whether it is maintained well enough," Indian Airlines spokesman Robin Pathak told The Associated Press in New Delhi. "There are more than 1,000 planes flying elsewhere that are more than 25 years old."

The plane crashed around 7:30 a.m. into the government employees' complex just more than a mile from the airport in Patna, capital of Bihar.

Police said Tuesday that the mangled parts of the plane were still at the crash site, although earlier they had said salvage teams hauled the debris away at night to the airport in tractor-trailers.

Pepsi signs 1st check for Hale Library

By SHAWN HEIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hale Library received one million reasons to drink Pepsi on Monday morning.

The library received the first of its $5 million endowments from Pepsi Cola of Marysville, Kan. The endowment to the library stemmed from a 10-year, $12 million agreement between K-State and the Pepsi Cola company, reached Nov. 4, 1999.

Almost 50 people were on hand in the Gothic Room at Hale Library for the presentation, which lasted about a half hour. Included in the crowd were administration members, distinguished faculty members, Student Body President Jake Worcester, as well as K-State President Jon Wefald.

Wefald said the crowd's composition showed the importance of the event, as well as the excitement involved.

"We are very excited to have an exclusive partnership between Kansas State and Pepsi Cola," Wefald said.

With Pepsi Cola drinks being provided at the presentation, Wefald joked how popular Pepsi was at K-State just by looking around the room. Wefald also said the popularity of Mountain Dew, a Pepsi product that was quoted as being the most preferred drink among K-State students, shows the wide range of Pepsi products available.

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said the annual interest earned on the endowment is what will be used by the library. The funds will go toward purchasing books, journals, electronic media and other informational products. He also said the endowment will be very beneficial for K-State.

"The idea of the endowment is to make it work for you year after year," Hobrock said. "In 20 years, you will have generated a million dollars, which you will be able to spend. Endowments are the backbone of the future for the library."

Hobrock also emphasized how much the endowment will help the library reach its goal of $10 million. He said the funds will make this goal realistic.

"It isn't a long-term dream. It's a fairly short-term goal," Hobrock said. "We can see success down the road. That $5 million is 50 percent. When you know you can expect that, you just can't imagine what a great thing it is."

Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance, gave a brief break down of the total $12 million agreement. Besides the library's part of the $12 million, Schellhardt said $2.3 million will go toward scholarships. The rest of the money will benefit the student government, student activities, residence halls and the athletic department, he said.

Schellhardt, who also worked on negotiations in the deal, agreed with Wefald that the variety of products available from Pepsi Cola was a large benefit. He said products such as isotonic drinks and tea made him very excited to deal with the Pepsi Cola company.

"We're very pleased with the partnership with Pepsi because of the variety of products they offer to the students and faculty," Schellhardt said.

The partnership with Pepsi Cola also includes national sales manager Scott Loeffler. Loeffler, a K-State graduate, said he was excited about the partnership between his alma mater and employer.

"When I heard this was going to involve funds for the library, I was very excited," Loeffler said. "I've been doing partnerships with colleges for 8 years. This was the most positive experience I've ever had."

LIFETIME BEGINS WITH
AIR FORCE ROTC

- Are you a:
- Freshman
 - Sophomore
 - Junior/Senior with 2 academic years to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective -- but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation -- as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try -- you won't regret it.

Alcohol poisoning cause of death of man found in pool

GARDEN CITY, Kan. — A man who died after jumping into what is believed to be the world's largest outdoor swimming pool was four times over the state's legal limit for being drunk, an autopsy showed.

The autopsy showed Jesus Laredo died of acute alcohol poisoning asphyxia, City Manager Bob Halloran said Tuesday. Laredo had a blood-alcohol content of .35 percent. The legal limit in Kansas is .08 percent.

Laredo jumped into the pool about 6 p.m. He was pronounced dead at St. Catherine Hospital about 40 minutes later.

Laredo passed out under water and had muscle spasms which closed his air pipe, according to the autopsy. No water was found in his lungs.

The death was the first at the pool since the late 1970s.

The pool is nearly a half-block long and holds 2.8 million gallons of water.

Serial killer to be executed on anniversary of 1st murder

McALESTER, Okla. — Gregg Francis Braun faced a walk to Oklahoma's death chamber Wednesday, 11 years to the day after he shot his first victim and felt he had to kill again.

Braun, 39, whose 1989 murder spree crossed four states and left five people dead, was scheduled to die by drug injection at the Oklahoma State Penitentiary early Thursday.

Attorneys for Braun worked on other last-minute appeals late Wednesday morning. A panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals denied a request for a stay of execution. The court said it had no jurisdiction and sent the petition back to the district court in Muskogee, Okla.

"We're still trying to get the stay of execution," Braun's attorney, Benjamin McCullar said Tuesday. "Gregg Francis Braun should be sent back to New Mexico to finish out his life sentence."

Braun received the death penalty for shooting and killing Gwendolyn Sue Miller, 31, in her parents' Ardmore, Okla., floral shop. Miller's husband, Dusty, and their three children planned to watch him die on the eve of the anniversary of her July 21, 1989, death.

Dead pilots of Indian flight charged on criminal counts

PATNA, India — Police filed criminal complaints Wednesday against the dead pilots of a jet that crashed in eastern India this week, killing 56 people.

Word of the charges came as another plane from the same airline, Alliance Air, suffered landing gear trouble and was forced to circle over an airport for an hour. The incident heightened concerns about technical problems plaguing Alliance Air's fleet of a dozen 20-year-old Boeing jets.

The complaint filed in Monday's crash accuses Capt. M.S. Sohanpal and co-pilot A.S. Bagga of violating five different counts of Indian criminal and aviation laws. They include "culpable homicide not amounting to murder" and "rash driving or riding in a public place."

Fire kills at least 17 residents of Costa Rican nursing home

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — A fire burned down a nursing home north of the capital early Wednesday, killing at least 17 residents — many blind or in wheelchairs — who were trapped in the building.

Firefighters were able to rescue the remaining 24 residents, police and Red Cross officials said. Two survivors were being treated for serious burns at a hospital. The rest were taken to a nearby church.

The fire started in a wooden roof, which quickly collapsed and spread flames to the rest of the nursing home, located in the town of Tilaran, 120 miles northwest of the capital, San Jose.

A security guard on duty notified firefighters, who heard screams coming from the building when they arrived. Radio Reloj reported that all of the building's doors were locked, making it difficult to enter the home.

Some of the patients were either blind or in wheelchairs, which made the rescue more difficult.

"The saddest part was that the ones we rescued tried to go back in to save their fellow residents," local police spokeswoman Edith Mora told Radio Reloj.

Flint Hills Breadbasket fights to minimize

HUNGER

By BEN HOPPER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hunger does not take a vacation. Neither does the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"We provide emergency food to those in need," said Dan Parcel, administrative assistant of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The Breadbasket, which started in 1982, provides food and services to Riley County, but distributes food to pantries in 13 counties in northeast Kansas.

In Manhattan, the Breadbasket works with area churches that distribute food.

Parcel said the Breadbasket distributed more than 2.8 million pounds of food during the last fiscal year.

"But if we just give out food, we would be a Band-Aid, just temporarily healing," Shirley Bramhall, Breadbasket director, said.

The Breadbasket has programs to help clients achieve self-sufficiency.

There is a job board and resources from the community to assist clients, she said.

"We have seminars that teach people how to stretch their food dollars," she said.

Bramhall oversees day-to-day operations of the Breadbasket.

"I assess what the needs are and help fulfill them," she said.

Bramhall and three other staff members work with volunteers to execute the mission of the Breadbasket: "to minimize hunger and poverty through the distribution of available food and to nurture projects that will help alleviate hunger and poverty."

Bramhall said that in any given year, more than 20,000 hours of volunteer service are given to the Breadbasket.

K-State First Lady Ruth Ann Wefald is one of those volunteers. "When Jon and I got here, we wanted to do something at Christmas to help the community," she said.

She took a donation to the Breadbasket, enjoyed the experience and got involved. She served on the Board of Directors a few years ago.

She is now back on the board, serving as president.

Wefald was instrumental in getting the Cat's for Cans started, a program allowing K-Staters to raise donations for the Breadbasket.

"We felt we should do something to parallel the efforts of the community," she said.

Wefald said there are special drives to keep the warehouse full throughout the year.

"Our main fund-raiser is Project Manhattan," Parcel said. "Over 200 business raise food donations in May."

Other events the Breadbasket have done include the Mayor's Holiday Tree and the Thanksgiving dinner, where more than 200 volunteers help provide food for working poor, unemployed and those in need.

The next event to collect food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket will be 7:30 Friday night at Forum Hall in the Union.

The Lane Frost movie "8 Seconds" will be shown to kick off the Kaw Valley Rodeo, July 27-29, and the Kaw Valley Food Round-Up.

Admission to the movie is a donation of three non-perishable food items or money.

The Kaw Valley Rodeo Association, K-State Rodeo Club and the Union Program Council are sponsoring the event.

"People are hungry year round," Wefald said. "Summertime is really important."

UPCOMING EVENT:

The movie "8 Seconds" will be playing at 7:30 Friday night at Forum Hall. Admission is 3 cans of non-perishable food items or a monetary donation.

Girls testify father gave them bad-tasting soft drinks

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS, Kan. — Wearing frilly dresses and clutching dolls, two girls testified Tuesday that their father, who is accused of poisoning them with antifreeze, gave them bad-tasting soft drinks.

Donald Paul Ayres, 31, of Culver, is charged with two counts of attempted first-degree murder, two counts of child abuse and two counts of child endangerment.

Ashley Ayres, 10, told jurors at the Ottawa County courthouse that she felt fine when she came home from school Feb. 23, 1999. But shortly after her father gave her a disgusting-tasting Pepsi, she felt dizzy and fell off a trampoline and a swing set in the yard.

Later that night, her illness grew worse, and she was taken to a hospital where she fell into a coma.

But at one point during testimony, defense attorney Mike Sheahon implied that Donald Ayres' mother might have given the girls the idea that their father poisoned them.

"You told them their daddy put antifreeze in their pop, didn't you?" Sheahon asked Rose Schriner, the girls' grandmother.

Schriner said she had told the children, on the advice of a child psychologist at the hospital, because the children needed to understand why they had been removed from their father's custody.

After 9-year-old Chelsie Ayres was hospitalized, Schriner said she had asked her what had made her ill. "She said, 'Grandma, I drank a yucky pop,'" Schriner recalled.

On cross examination by Sheahon, Chelsie said different people have continued to tell her she was poisoned with antifreeze.

Chelsie testified about the day she went to visit her sister at the hospital.

She said that she liked the Pepsi her father gave her during the trip — until he took it with him to the back of the van. Earlier that day, she watched him place in the van a plastic jar containing greenish liquid, poured from a container in a storage shed at their Culver home.

The next day, Chelsie was admitted to the hospital.

Lab tests revealed both girls had been poisoned with ethylene glycol, the main component of antifreeze.

Apple introduces faster new compact computers

■ New products include miniaturized G4 Cube, 4 new colors for iMacs.

By DONNA MURPHY WESTON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Apple Computer on Wednesday introduced faster, more compact and lower-priced machines and a new oval-shaped mouse to replace the company's much-maligned round mouse.

Apple also announced a new palette of hues for its popular candy-colored iMac computers.

The company's first new machines in nine months were rolled out by chief executive Steve Jobs as the Macworld Expo opened Wednesday.

He said new versions of Apple's top-of-the-line G4 PowerMacs will contain an industry first: two central processing units instead of the usual one, which will yield more computing power. But the price will the same.

In a design feat, Apple also introduced the G4 Cube, which miniaturizes all the features of a mid-range G4 in an elegant 8-by-8-inch machine. The G4 Cube, which comes with clear tennis-ball-size speakers, will be available in August and sell for $1,799.

On the lower end of the price spectrum, Jobs announced two sub-for $799.

The sleek egg-shaped machines also will come in new colors: indigo, sage, ruby and snow.

Perhaps the most anticipated product introduced Wednesday was an oval-shaped optical mouse. It has no roller ball, so it doesn't need cleaning and works on nearly any surface. The entire surface of the mouse works as the button and fits any hand, making it easier for children and the left-handed to use.

"We're going from what some think is the worst mouse in the industry to the best," Jobs said.

On Tuesday, Apple posted third-quarter earnings that beat Wall Street's expectations by a penny a share. Profits for the quarter ended July 1 rose 43 percent to $163 million, or 45 cents per share, compared with $104 million, or 35 cents per share, in the year-ago quarter.

The company credited strong sales of its signature iMac and PowerBook computers.

Investors seemed to want better numbers. Apple stock closed down 8 percent, or $4.562, at $52.688 Wednesday on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

barbecue hints

The art of barbecuing.

It's more of a sport, really. It's you vs. the grill, and your only weapon for defense is the metal spatula you hold in your hand. The odds are against you. The grill has the meat, the hot charcoal and, most importantly, the fire. But, after taking on several battles with the grill, I have learned a few bits of advice that I would like to pass on to beginning barbecuers. After all, summer is the perfect time to perfect the art, to master the sport.

1. Don't use a plastic spatula.
2. When using a gas grill, don't set the gas on high.
3. Thoroughly drain all blood from meat. Otherwise, the meat doesn't stick together very well.
4. During blood-draining, have a trash can available for the weaker-stomached.
5. Add flavor to the meat prior to grilling.
6. Salt, pepper, barbecue sauce or Italian dressing are several quality seasoning choices.
7. Grab a beer.
8. If it's chicken, make sure you clean everything it touches.
9. If it's beef, make sure you clean everything you touch.
10. Grab another beer.
11. Make sure the flame is evenly dispersed.
12. Make sure the meat is evenly dispersed.
13. Rotate the meat every so often.
14. Red is bad. Black is bad. Dark brown is good.
15. A little cheese can fix any problem.
16. Have another beer.
17. Add a vegetable to go with the meat and all will be impressed.
18. Turn off the gas when you're through.
19. Put out the flame.
20. Using a meat thermometer, placed into the meat according to instructions, cook the meat to these internal temperatures:

- Pork chops, roasts and ground pork — 160° F
- Beef, veal, lamb-roasts and steaks — (medium rare to well-done) 145°-170° F
- Ground beef — 160° F
- Whole poultry — 180° F
- Ground poultry — 165° F

21. Serve with style.

Summer's SIZZLE

Students, residents can barbecue on grills in Manhattan's parks

Scents of summer barbecues linger in the air this time of year.

This summer, some people might prefer grilling and gathering with friends in their own backyards, but the City of Manhattan does offer many facilities around town for summer barbecues.

At parks in Manhattan, there are eight shelters that provide grills and picnic tables for barbecuing.

Debbie Dugan, office manager at Manhattan Parks & Recreation, said the park shelters are popular places right now for barbecuing.

"The shelters are busy every weekend throughout the summer," Dugan said. "Not every shelter is always reserved, but there's usually something going on everywhere."

City Park has two shelters with barbecue facilities — City Park Pavilion and the Poyntz Shelter. There are also grills all around the park.

Long's Park, Goodnow Park, Douglass Park and Sojourner Truth

Park each have a shelter. Two shelters are available at Frank Anneberg Park.

While grills and tables are provided at the parks, barbecuers need to bring their own charcoal, lighter fluid, utensils and all other amenities.

Dugan said that reservations are not required for use of the shelters, although most of the parks do take reservations.

"It's basically on a first come, first serve basis," Dugan said. "The general public is welcome to barbecue at all the shelters."

BEATING THE HEAT

Prevention, precaution keys to avoiding heat-related illness

STORY BY PETER ANDERSON ■ ART BY BECKY WILSON

As summer temperatures and humidity rise, so does the risk of heat stroke.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, said knowing the warning signs and precautions to take for heat stroke are important.

Heat stroke is the third and final stage of heat-related problems.

The first stage is known as the muscle-cramp stage.

Warning signs of the muscle-cramp stage are dizziness, thirst, profuse sweating and the onset of muscle cramps, Kennedy said.

To combat the effects of the muscle cramp stage, the Arnot Ogden Medical Center recommends drinking plenty of fluids, taking breaks and moving to a cool area when-ever possible.

The second stage is the heat-exhaustion stage. Signs of the onset of heat exhaustion are cool, moist, pale skin, with the person becoming irrational, nauseated and vomiting. There is also a possibility of passing out, Kennedy said.

The final stage is heat stroke, which needs immediate medical attention, Kennedy said.

She said that when heat stroke occurs, the body can no longer regulate its temperature. Extreme confusion sets in, and a person can fall into a stage of seizures. Eventually, the body will go into a stage of cardiac arrest. One of the signs of heat stroke is hot, red, dry skin between 106 and 112 degrees Fahrenheit.

"The evaporation of sweat is the body's natural mechanism for cooling down the body," Kennedy said. "Sweating is good. When the body stops sweating, that is a serious problem."

People most likely to be affected by the heat are young children and the elderly, because their bodies do not regulate temperature well.

Kennedy said it is important people do not underestimate heat stroke, and that there are plenty of precautions one can take. Sports drinks with electrolytes and water are the best options, and consistently replenishing fluids, even if not thirsty is necessary.

She said to avoid alcohol and caffeine because both can cause the onset of dehydration. Also, take breaks and move to a cool area if at all possible. Air conditioning is best, if available, because high humidity slows the body's ability to cool properly.

The Arnot Ogden Medical Center suggests that if one knows they will be exposed to greater heat or humidity than normal, to take several days spending time in similar conditions in order to get used to it.

Advice on exercising in hot and humid conditions

- Desensitize your body to the hotter environment by doing only 50 percent of your normal workout the first day. Each day after, add 10 percent onto your workout until you're able to complete your entire routine by day six. This is especially advisable when hotter, more humid weather has arrived abruptly rather than over a period of time.

- To treat heat cramps, drink lightly-salted fluids and massage the cramped area.

- In order to know how much water you are losing through perspiration, weigh yourself before and after your normal workout. In hot weather, you might lose twice as much as in cooler temperatures. For each pound of body weight lost during exercise, drink two cups of water. Don't use thirst as a guideline. The thirst mechanism always underestimates fluid loss during exercise in the heat.

Pepsi check will go to library improvements

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pepsi Cola's $1 million check, presented to K-State on Tuesday, will lead to improvements in library material at Hale Library.

The $1 million initial sponsorship payment is the first of the $5 million that will fund Hale Library during the 10-year, $12 million contract between the university and Pepsi Cola.

The contract money will give the library a boost in its own $10 million endowment funding goal.

With the money from Pepsi and other gifts, K-State President Jon Wefald said fund raising for the library's $10 million goal is about 65-percent complete.

"We're on the road to success to solving the library's funding problem," Wefald said.

In 1997, the $10 million endowment began when K-State's library was looking for ways to improve materials found in Hale, including use of state money, fund raising and sponsored research overhead funds.

After one year, the interest earned on the $1 million from Pepsi will generate $50,000 for the library.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the money will go toward more undergraduate books and databases to support K-State programs.

"If you take an average of $50 a book and consider $50,000 more a year, that's 1,000 new books in a year and 20 more books a week," Hobrock said.

The library's money from Pepsi will all go into non-recurring items. Recurring items include subscriptions to journals and other items produced more than once.

"The best thing for this money is for it to go into books and information services," Hobrock said. "Those are things that can go directly in the hands of students on a one-time basis."

After this first $1 million payment, Hale will receive the other $4 million through annual payments of $400,000 over the 10-year contract.

Hobrock said the annual $50,000 is a 10-percent increase from the money now spent on books.

"That sounds like a small increase, but that's a 50-percent increase by the end of 10 years," Hobrock said.

Union hair center opened Tuesday

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sitting down in the salon chair, Mary Fleming received a haircut, perm and style. She was the first customer.

She wasn't at the mall, though, or even off-campus. She was the Union Hair Care Center's first customer as it opened Tuesday morning.

"It's great the students and the employees around the campus have a place to go," Fleming, of Junction City, said. "A lot of people like to go over lunch or after work to get a haircut, and this gives students and faculty the chance to get their haircut without going off campus. I think it's real neat."

Cain said although she is the only stylist, the K-State Student Union plans to hire more.

"I don't think we'll have any problem filling the spaces," she said.

She also said the new store will take some getting used to, and that she's trying to maintain a focus.

"You gotta stay focused on your goals," she said. "And right now, I'm keeping focused on my customers."

Cain said while she has been licensed for 11 years, she has been doing hair since 1971.

"I started because I wanted to look a certain way," she said. "I was intrigued by some of the Hollywood figures, and I always studied their hairstyles."

Cain said the store eventually will do makeup, ear piercing and hair extensions. Until then, she will focus on hair.

The store's summer hours are Tuesday through Thursday from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Saturday, by appointment, from 9 a.m. to noon.

Discounts are available for K-State faculty, staff and students.

Vermont sheep owners seek to prevent animals from being destroyed

By WILSON RING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST WARREN, Vt. — The owners of two flocks of imported sheep went to court Wednesday to try to keep the government from destroying the animals out of fear they are infected with a form of mad cow disease.

A total of 276 sheep are scheduled to be removed from three Vermont farms by Friday, and their carcasses will be incinerated.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture ordered the sheep destroyed because tests on four animals detected a brain abnormality that could be a form of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or mad cow disease.

An outbreak of mad cow disease in Britain in 1995 devastated that nation's beef industry and killed about 50 people.

Owners Houghton Freeman of Stowe and Larry and Linda Faillace of East Warren filed requests Wednesday in federal court in Burlington, arguing that no sheep outside a laboratory has ever contracted the disease.

The owners of a third farm, in Lyndonville, have agreed to sell their flock to the government to be destroyed.

The sheep, a breed called East Friesians, have been quarantined since 1998, two years after the first of them arrived from Belgium.

The sheep came from an area of Belgium where BSE has been found.

The disease is spread when animals eat feed made from the brains of infected animals, and the USDA said there is a possibility the imported sheep ate contaminated feed before they were imported.

The sheep were imported for their milk production. The farmers have been allowed to sell cheese made from the animals' milk, but on Tuesday the state Health Department recommended that people not eat the cheese.

Members of Vermont's congressional delegation issued a statement Wednesday supporting the decision to destroy the sheep.

Congress seeks couples tax cut resolution

Negotiators prepare to resolve differences between versions; GOP wants settlement this week.

By CURT ANDERSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — House and Senate negotiators hope to resolve differences quickly between competing bills to cut income taxes for millions of married couples as Republicans rush to force President Clinton to veto or sign the measure prior to the national GOP convention.

GOP leaders say a veto of the "marriage penalty" bill could put the president and Vice President Al Gore in a tough political spot, because both have recommended its elimination as long as the tax cuts are less costly and targeted toward middle- and lower-income couples.

"It's going to be very hard to explain," Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said. "Mr. President, are you for eliminating the marriage penalty tax or not?"

The Senate passed its version of the bill Tuesday on a 61-38 vote, brushing aside the veto threat and Democratic criticism that the legislation is skewed to the wealthy. Eight Democrats joined most Republicans in favor of the 10-year, $248 billion tax cut, but the margin was not veto-proof.

The House already has passed a bill to cut married couples' taxes by $182 billion over 10 years, which differs somewhat from the Senate bill. A House-Senate conference committee will work out the differences, and GOP leaders intend to finish by week's end.

House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., and Lott met Wednesday in an effort to reach a quick agreement amid some signs that Republicans could moderate the bill's cost in a bid to win Clinton's support and get a concrete accomplishment for voters.

In a statement Tuesday, Clinton repeated his offer to sign the GOP marriage penalty bill only if Congress also sends him a measure creating an acceptable Medicare prescription-drug benefit.

"This is the best way to break the partisan logjam and help the tens of millions of older Americans across this country who face rising prescription drug costs," the president said.

"By itself, I would veto this bill."

To draw a distinction between the GOP and Democrats on the tax issue, Republicans want to get the stand-alone bill to Clinton before their Philadelphia convention begins July 31.

Republicans also will hold back until September a bill passed last week to repeal estate taxes so the issues don't get muddled for the public.

Gleeful GOP supporters pointed to new Congressional Budget Office projections of an enormous $2.17 trillion surplus over the next decade as evidence of the need to cut taxes as well as pay down the public debt.

The administration, House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, said, "is officially out of excuses for not accepting tax fairness. These growing surpluses must be applied to debt reduction and tax relief."

GOP leaders want to use a portion of the estimated $102 billion surplus in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1 to permit people to benefit in that year from some of the "marriage penalty" cut.

The Senate bill delays some key provisions until 2002 at the earliest.

In addition, Republicans plan to push for more tax cuts in this election year, including a proposed expansion in tax-deferred contributions to retirement accounts and repeal of a 1993 tax increase imposed on the Social Security benefits of people with incomes above certain levels.

The Senate-passed "marriage penalty" bill would cut taxes for about 45 million couples, including about 25 million two-earner households in which couples pay more than they would if single. It also would cut taxes for millions of other couples who receive a marriage "bonus" because one spouse earns considerably more than the other.

Democrats heaped scorn on the Republican drive for tax cuts, saying they risk squandering the surplus to benefit primarily upper-income people while ignoring such spending priorities as providing prescription drugs under Medicare and smaller classroom sizes.

"It's very clear that the Republicans in Congress have decided to put aside their responsibilities and to play politics," White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said.

Citing research from the labor-funded Citizens for Tax Justice, Democrats said almost 58 percent of major GOP tax cuts passed or pending this year would go to families with incomes in the top 5 percent, more than $130,000 a year.

"They are more interested in taking care of their wealthy friends than working families," House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., said.

"I don't think the American people are dumb. They don't want the (surplus) money to go to tax cuts for the wealthy."

Serial killer suspect asks for closed hearing

By The ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLATHE, Kan. — Attorneys for suspected serial killer John E. Robinson Sr. have asked Tuesday that his preliminary hearing be closed to the public and the news media.

In one of a dozen motions filed in Johnson County District Court, defense lawyers said they expect intense media coverage, which they argue would make it impossible for Robinson to receive a fair trial.

Robinson, 56, is charged with two counts of capital murder in Kansas and three counts of first-degree murder in Missouri in the deaths of five women found in barrels in June.

Robinson's Kansas preliminary hearing is scheduled for Oct. 2. He is being held on $5 million bond.

The defense motion cites rules that allow a closed hearing if there is a "clear and present danger to fairness."

Several attorneys in Johnson County said they could not recall a time when a preliminary hearing was closed to the public.

Ron Evans, head of the death penalty defense unit representing Robinson, said he could not comment on the motions. Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison also would not comment.

A hearing date on the motions is tentatively set for Aug. 23.

Collapsed building kills 2, injures another Monday

PHILADELPHIA — Part of a row-house under renovation collapsed Monday, killing a construction worker and the co-owner of a mom-and-pop store on the ground floor. Another worker was injured.

The body of shop owner Adolph Stahl was taken out of the building just after 1 p.m., more than four hours after the collapse. Fire officials said Stahl most likely died instantly.

Other states look to follow Vermont's civil unions lead

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Since Vermont became the first state in the nation to grant gay and lesbian couples nearly all the rights and benefits of marriage, politicians from New Hampshire to California have been intrigued about how they can follow suit.

Many gay-rights advocates say Vermont will remain a pioneer on the issue for a while — until the public becomes more comfortable with the idea. Still, some lawmakers are already working on laws modeled after the one in Vermont, which broke new legal ground without wandering into the politically volatile thicket of marriage.

Mexico gets morbid detail of ex-president's corruption

MEXICO CITY — Detailing corruption, sex and murder in high places, the ex-mistress of a former president's brother has written a book that gives a lurid portrait of the behavior that helped lead Mexicans to end the 71-year reign of the Institutional Revolutionary Party.

The expose, written by Maria Bernal, the Spanish ex-mistress of Raul Salinas, who was imprisoned for homicide shortly after his brother Carlos left Mexico's presidency, provides a first-hand look at the corruption that helped bring the party down.

OUR VIEW CAMPUS (VERB) THREAT OF QUICK (NOUN), (NOUN)

You've always wanted to know: how do we write these editorial boards for the paper? Well, using templates hand-crafted by Armenian artisan editors, we throw in a few words and voila, instant edboard, just add water.

Here. Do it yourself. Write one number, five adjectives, 11 nouns, 10 plural nouns, two past-tense verbs, two gerund verbs ("-ing" verbs) and plug 'em in. Repeat as necessary until the Collegian returns in August.

K-State faculty are (adjective) and might be (past-tense verb) by some.

This leaves most faculty (plural noun) feeling as if their (noun) is often (past tense verb), especially unclassified (plural noun). If the (noun) continues to (verb) between the two (plural noun) of faculty, (adjective) feelings could (verb) between the two, creating (noun) and (noun).

(Plural noun) blame the (noun) for the (adjective) salaries. Legislators blame the (noun) of money. With (adjective) cooperation, faculty (plural noun) in Kansas could (verb) other state schools.

Until then, Kansas and this (noun) will continue to (verb) valuable educators. (Gerund verb) salaries doesn't just give (plural noun) and (adjective) professionals more money in their (plural noun); they bring better and brighter (plural noun) and more money for (noun).

It's time for everyone involved to (verb) where Kansas (plural noun) could be (gerund verb) if something isn't done to (verb) the (noun).

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

DEADLY JUSTICE?

Columnist argues validity of death penalty's purpose

There's been much talk recently about the death penalty, mostly about whether the correct people are getting executed. But two more fundamental questions need to be addressed: 1) What purpose does the death penalty serve? 2) Why is the United States alone as the sole developed Western nation that has a death penalty?

VIEWPOINT
DAVID LEVIN

1) On purpose: Rehabilitation: If a person is to be executed, there will be no opportunity for the convicted to become a contributing citizen.

Restitution:

Again, if a person is to be executed, there will be no opportunity for this person to even attempt to make some sort of amends to society for the crimes perpetrated.

Deterrence: As Nobel laureate Gary Becker demonstrated, the only thing that strongly deters criminal activity is likelihood of being caught. Furthermore, Becker's work showed no correlation between criminal activity and severity of punishment.

Cost: It's more costly to litigate a death penalty case through time of execution than to litigate and retain a person in jail for life. According to the Miami Herald, a Duke University report, and the Dallas Morning News, a death penalty case can cost between $2 million to $3 million, while retaining a person in jail for the rest of their lives, with subsequent legal fees, costs around $600,000.

To save money, many conservatives have been trying to pass legislation limiting due process for capital crimes.

This recently came to a halt with the realization that many inmates on death row are victims of prosecutorial mistakes and incompetent counsel and with Illinois putting a moratorium on executions when it turned out that nearly half of those on death row in Illinois had been released because of wrongful convictions.

It becomes obvious that the sole purpose the death penalty serves is fulfilling a sense of revenge.

Revenge may be as good a reason as any is for having a death penalty, but it's such a base emotion and has no appeal to intellect.

2) On why the United States is the sole Western nation with a death penalty:

While other developed Western nations possess a strong sense of community, the United States has a tradition of individuality and independence. Unfortunately, in this case (as with many others), "individuality" and "independence" are euphemisms for "selfishness" and "self-centeredness."

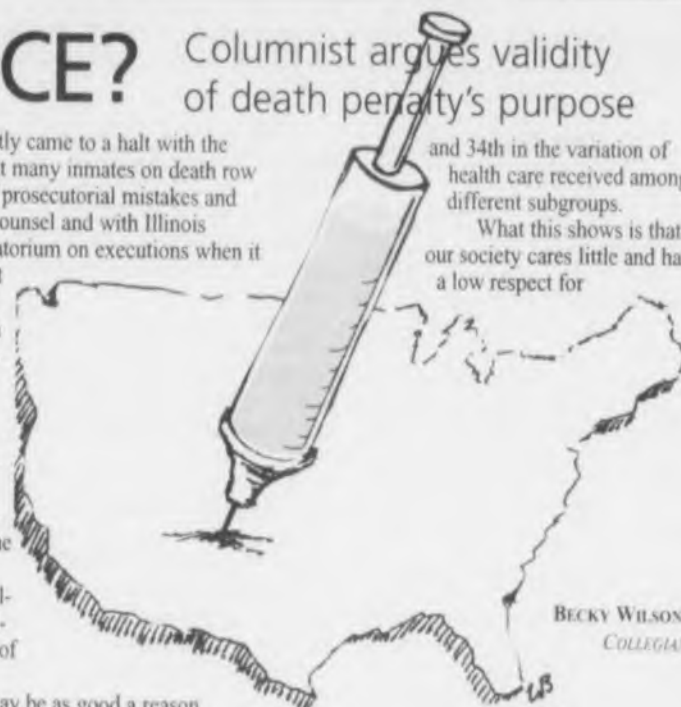

This is most evident in how health care is treated within the United States.

According to the Global Index of Health, released by the World Health Organization in June, the United States stands alone without peer in health care resources and its per capita spending on health.

However, the United States ranks 15th in overall health care, 24th in life expectancy and 34th in the variation of health care received among different subgroups.

What this shows is that our society cares little and has a low respect for other humans. That's why the United States has such an inefficient health care system and ranks No. 5 in the world in number of prisoners put to death (98 last year; countries Nos. 1-4 are China, Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Democratic Republic of Congo).

BECKY WILSON/

The retention of the death penalty, particularly for reasons based solely on revenge and self-centeredness, is degrading to our notion of being a civilized society.

Even if an individual is truly guilty of an inhumane act, this individual is still a member of the human race, and thus, out of respect for the greater humanity to which we all belong, the death penalty should be abolished.

Graduate ponders future personal life, satisfied with college career

"College is," my good friend said, "the last great breeding ground."

Now, what you need to understand about the two of us is our web of feigned ambivalence toward the entire subject of relationships. With men. So cool, so nonchalant, we swear like Merchant Marines (A high school student said to me recently, "Brandi, you swear more than any man I've ever met.") and send out an infamous "I don't give a damn" vibe. We are the original grrrrs.

You see, when we talk to each other, we are the essence of everything fruity and whiny about women that we so desperately hate. We know this; others do not.

However, when she expounded upon this "last breeding ground" theory, even I was surprised to hear it coming from her. Usually, even between each other, we maintain the barest semblance of self-respect. And her theory paved the way for a no-holds-barred dissection of the what the future could possibly hold for two decidedly heterosexual women, with some character traits that some would call kind of lesbian, who did not find a suitable mate in college.

This all made me begin to think about things I haven't really thought about before. I had always assumed I would someday get married, but now I'm not so sure.

I am leaving K-State for good in three days, and I am generally quite content with the status of my personal life. I have no real obligations to anyone, except myself and my credit card bills. I am completely free to flee to Germany and completely free to move anywhere I want when I get back. Yes, these are heady times, indeed. Just what I've always wanted.

Fellow Collegian worker Nancy Foster — who most wantonly pimped herself to get a mention in this column — said on the topic, "Getting married before you're 25 is like putting a gun to your head and almost pulling the trigger, but not." I don't know how much I agree with that, but she was so emphatic that I just couldn't overlook her insight.

VIEWPOINT
BRANDI HERTIG

But I do want to get married. Eventually. Until the other night, the whole concept was but a distant glimmer in my eye. It still is, but now I am wondering if, in eight years, I will become desperate to win over a man — any man — a la every episode of "Ally McBeal"?

Sweet Jesus.

My friend's proclamation made me wonder if I have missed my window of opportunity. Sure, I've dated my fair share of nice guys in college, but none of them were able to stack up against the formidable task of Brandi tolerating. I didn't come to college with the intention of landing myself a nice slab of the opposite sex, anyway. I don't think I even realized at the time that many people actually go to college for that sole purpose. Now I wonder if I should've bucked up and gotten married when the chance arose, even though I wasn't ready.

Nah.

I am happy. This dopey grin on my face is the real thing, the result of the excitement that comes at the end of finishing something hugely fantastic. I got everything I could ever have wanted out of K-State — a great education, a great newspaper experience, great friends, great professors, great memories. And now, I am not tied down anywhere. To quote my favorite photographer, Cary Conover, "Dude..."

That's the news, and I am out of here.

Senior citizen volunteers at local agencies, inspires others to help

By APRIL BLACKMON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

She has been a volunteer in Manhattan since 1979.

At 101 years old, Freda Grist is still dedicated to working.

"It keeps me young," she said.

Grist records volunteers' hours for the Retirement and Senior Volunteer Program Inc., a United Way agency that provides volunteer opportunities for people 55 and older. With 530 volunteers logging in about 100,000 hours per year, Grist keeps busy.

In addition to working at the Seniors' Service Center every Tuesday, Grist occasionally helps with United Way for Riley County's bulk mailing. Every December, Grist takes tickets for RSVP's annual fund-raiser, Santa City.

Her desire to volunteer and friendly personality is inspiring other volunteers.

"Freda's a doll," Lori Bishop, executive director for RSVP, said. "She has the sweetest personality that makes people drawn to her."

"She has stayed loyal to the program and has been so active for 20 years now."

Grist's commitment to RSVP won her United Way for Riley County's Shining Star award in January. The annual award is given to a stand-out United Way participant.

The long-term commitment Grist has made struck a cord, said Aileen Cray, executive director of United Way for Riley County. "If you make that kind of commitment for 20 years, that's a long time and it stands out," she said.

Bishop said Grist is a model volunteer.

"She's an inspiration to a lot of people," Bishop said.

"She believes in what she does. You take someone like Freda, and it speaks highly in the importance of volunteering."

Many seniors aren't able to stay active with programs, due to various complications with age, Bishop said. Grist's commitment has been exceptional.

"She'll be 102 next month, and it's quite amazing," Bishop said.

Having no serious illnesses and only one admittance to the hospital, Grist said her good health comes from the way she grew up.

"I think I've been so healthy because I grew up in the country," she said.

She also said staying active has kept her healthy.

"I've worked all my life," she said. "I miss it terribly if I'm not around people. I get lonely."

If she gets bored, she calls up and they find something for her to do, Cray said, adding that Grist finds volunteering fulfilling.

"She tries to find ways to get involved," Cray said. "She always wants to do more."

Wrestlers take Manhattan

Jenny Schridde, 14, attended the Kansas Kids Wrestling Camp last week for the third time, and was the only girl in attendance. Schridde will wrestle as an eighth grader in Great Bend, Kan., this year.

MICHAEL YOUNG/
COLLEGIAN

Female wrestler breaks into predominantly male arena

By PETER ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For 14-year-old Jenny Schridde, wrestling against boys has never been a big deal — she has six brothers. But her goal to become the first girl to place in the Kansas State High School Wrestling Tournament is a big deal.

"There is nothing more hurtful to a guy than losing to a girl for the first time," said Ned Price, state wrestling competition director for Kansas Wrestling Kids Club.

Schridde, of Great Bend, Kan., has already put together quite a résumé going into eighth grade. She has one children's state wrestling title, two second-place finishes and a third-place finish. This past year, she passed up the opportunity to compete in the children's state wrestling meet to go to girls' nationals, where she finished second.

Schridde has been wrestling in the Great Bend children's wrestling program for the past nine years and just finished attending the Kansas Wrestling Kids Club camp in Manhattan for the third time. Three of her brothers were also in attendance at the camp, but there weren't any other girls.

The guys don't treat her any different, and the way they act doesn't bother her, Schridde said.

"I have six brothers — I am used to boys," Schridde said while laughing.

Price said it is no surprise that Schridde is as good as she is.

"Her willingness to compete and work make her great," Price said. "I've watched her this week — she is always paying attention. If you look around at the other groups, half of the kids would be off in la-la land. She is not afraid."

Camp gives students pointers on wrestling

By PETER ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The cradle, the half-nelson and the single-leg take-down were under study at K-State last week at the Kansas Wrestling Kids Club's 10th annual camp.

Ned Price, state wrestling competition director for Kansas Kids, said the camp offers many benefits, including a good coaching staff.

"The kids get to work with some of the top high school coaches around the state," Price said. "For the younger ones, it's a chance for them to work with high school coaches and learn what they have ahead of them. For the younger ones, it's kind of setting the road for what is ahead of them."

West Harding, head camp coach and coach at Caney, Kan., said the camp offers other benefits, such as a chance for participants to make lifelong friends.

"These kids are building friendships that might last a lifetime," he said.

This year, the camp drew about 100 8- to 17-year-old campers, although Price said the camp has usually drawn about 150 participants in past years.

Price said the camp stresses certain values and that wrestling, as a sport, teaches a lesson about life.

"It teaches you a lot. You win, you take all the glory. You lose, you take all the heat," Price said. "Wrestling teaches a good lesson for life. Sometimes you have to say, 'I wasn't good enough to do the job. The other person was just better than me.'"

Price said wrestlers spend six to eight hours a day on the mat during the camp. In the morning and afternoon, coaches stress fundamentals and show campers moves. The evening session allows campers to put to use what they have learned with live wrestling matches against the other youth and games, such as takedown tournaments, that practice fundamentals.

"This is a good camp because it stresses the basics," Harding said. "And the basics are what wins kids state championships and high school state championships."

Sequoia Hill, 14, a three-time kids wrestling state champion from Wichita, said this was his third time to attend the camp and he keeps coming back for one reason.

"To get better," Hill said. "It goes over the basics — they don't show you moves that you aren't ever going to use."

Hill said the techniques used for takedowns shown by the coaches were the best part of the camp.

Rick Creek, father of two campers from Marysville, stayed in the residence halls with his kids. He said that he was having a good time watching his children learning and having fun.

NBC wants regulations set on AOL Time Warner merger

NEW YORK — NBC is joining ABC's parent company in expressing concerns to federal regulators that the America Online-Time Warner merger could result in an unfair concentration of power.

NBC, which is owned by General Electric Co., filed a document with the Federal Communications Commission asking it to impose a meaningful, enforceable commitment by AOL Time Warner to provide nondiscriminatory access to Time Warner's cable networks by other providers of programming.

Chicago's West Side evacuated after nitric acid spill Tuesday

CHICAGO — Dozens of people were evacuated from their homes Tuesday and thousands of train commuters were stalled because of a leak of nitric acid at a factory.

No injuries were reported. Firefighters were able to quickly contain the leak on the West Side but hadn't determined what started it, fire department spokesman Will Knight said.

Firefighters were called to Krel Laboratories about 7:40 a.m. and found nitric acid leaking from a tank, fire department spokesman Will Knight said. The acid formed an orange cloud that hung over the area for more than an hour.

Jobless rate increases in June; employment hits record high TOPEKA — The state's unemployment rate increased slightly in June, even though a record number of Kansans had jobs.

The Department of Human Resources said Tuesday that high school and college students flooded the job market in June, as they traditionally do. That pushed employment to a record level.

However, the number of people actively seeking work and unable to find it also increased, causing the unemployment rate to increase to 3.4 percent in June, up from 3.2 percent in May.

"It seems a little strange on the surface, but they're two independent variables," said William Layes, the department's chief of labor market information.

Cultist sentenced to death for killing lawyer's family

TOKYO — A former member of the cult behind the 1995 Tokyo subway nerve gas attack was sentenced Tuesday to death by hanging for an earlier gas attack and for killing a lawyer preparing to sue the cult, a court said.

The Tokyo District Court found Satoru Hashimoto, 33, guilty of involvement in a sarin nerve gas attack in central Japan in 1995 that killed seven people. Hashimoto helped the cultists spread the deadly gas.

In addition, Hashimoto was sentenced for the 1989 strangling deaths of attorney Tsutsumi Sakamoto, his wife and infant son. He is the second former member of the Aum Shinri Kyo cult to be sentenced to death for those killings.

Kazuaki Okazaki, 39, was sentenced in October 1998 but has appealed.

Colbert Hills welcomes golf academy

PHOTOS BY MICHAEL YOUNG

Colbert Hills Golf Course is combining golf and education this week at the inaugural First Tee National Academy.

The occasion has brought out some of the bigger names in golf. Earl Woods, Tiger Woods' father, and K-State alumnus Jim Colbert were just a couple of recognizable faces.

Colbert, current senior PGA player, said that while the celebrities help attract attention, it is still about the teens.

"The golf is great for the kids, but it's really an education program the kids are getting," Colbert said. "Kids need to see that they can go out and be successful, whether it be at golf or in other things in life."

The academy gives teen-agers from across the country the opportunity to learn about the game of golf from some of the top golf instructors, as well as teaching them leadership and life skills.

Ryan Walker, academy counselor and junior in family studies and human services, said the combination of skills is important to the teens.

"Giving them a chance to play golf is obviously a benefit—teaching to deal with problems in the game of golf, but also in life," Walker said.

Fred Tattersall, of Richmond, Va., donated $1 million for the academy to the William Powell Scholarship funds. Tattersall said he was pleased with his investment.

"I came up with the idea that the kids needed something more than just golf," Tattersall said. "So it would be neat to combine life skills with golf. Of course, you got this fantastic facility in Colbert Hills. It's a win-win situation."

The immediate success of the academy and future plans has given Tattersall an almost spiritual feeling.

"It's a great feeling," Tattersall said. "I don't have to wait for my reward in heaven. I get to have it now. Anytime you get to do something that gives a young person a chance to grow, it's pretty exciting."

Woods said the success of these academies will depend mainly on how well they are received by the teens.

"It's just wonderful that kids have the opportunity to play," Woods said.

"I just pray that they take advantage of it."

The academy also attracted interest from outside the United States. Pia Nilsson has been a golf coach for many top professionals in Sweden, including LPGA superstar Annika Sorenstam. Nilsson's pupils often follow the same guidelines as the academy. Nilsson said she believed being a professional takes more than just putting in hours at the driving range.

"I think there are so many coaches who only teach the technical part of the game," Nilsson said. "That's always been just one of many other aspects. Even for true professionals, there is so much life training and life skills and learning to deal with challenges and set goals. For me, that's always been a part of my coaching, but that hasn't only been the case traditionally."

While Colbert is happy with the success of the academy, he said there's still a lot of planning left.

"We've come a long ways, and I'm really proud of Kansas State," Colbert said. "It's satisfying, but it's almost more of a relief. This is just a start. We're going to try to bring in hundreds and hundreds of kids a year. Maybe even a thousand. We've got to get the classrooms built. We've got to get the clubhouses built."

Colbert jokingly said that getting teens on the golf course might cut down on youth arrests.

"I don't know a kid who plays golf that's a juvenile delinquent," Colbert said. "For a kid to spend four hours on the golf course and then another seven or eight in school, there's not enough time in the day to get into trouble."

Sophomore competes at U.S. Open

By JASON NICOL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State sophomore golfer Miranda Smith became the first women's golfer in school history to compete in a professional tournament at the 2000 Women's U.S. Open at the Merit Club in Gurnee, Ill., Friday and Saturday.

Smith shot an 85 Thursday and an 89 Friday for a two-day total of 174. The 30 over-par score failed to make the second-round cut.

Although Smith's outing ended Friday, head golf coach Kristi Knight said Smith did well for her age and the caliber of the competition.

"She handled herself very well," Knight said. "There is a lot of pressure for an 18-year-old at this tournament."

Aside from being nervous, Knight said she thought Smith played both good and bad golf for being in her first U.S. Open.

"She hit some great shots and had some good holes," Knight said. "But she also had some bad shots and some bad holes."

Smith also had some bad luck during her round Thursday. Going into the final hole for the day with a 77, she hit her drive off the 18 tee, but was unable to find her ball. Without the ability to take a provisional, she had to hit another tee shot and ended up taking an eight on the hole.

Although Knight said she did not think it was something that anyone should dwell on, it was the only time she saw Smith become upset with her performance.

"That was the only time that I saw her get frustrated, because nobody saw the ball," Knight said. "There were three other players, their caddies, and four course marshals and none of them saw where the ball went."

Knight said this was a good chance for Smith.

"In the long run, it will be a great learning experience for her," Knight said. "She handled herself very well. She didn't hang her head or lose her composure."

Concorde crashes outside Paris

By ANGELA DOLAND
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GONESSE, France — An Air France Concorde en route to New York crashed outside Paris shortly after takeoff Tuesday, slamming into a hotel and a restaurant. At least 113 people were killed when the charter flight of mostly German tourists went down in the first-ever crash of the needle-nosed supersonic jet.

Police said all 100 passengers and nine crew members on board Flight AF4590 were killed, and the Interior Ministry said four others died at the 72-room Relais Bleus hotel. All the passengers were German except for one American and two Danes, Air France said.

At least a dozen people were injured at the hotel. They were in good condition, Prime Minister Lionel Jospin said.

Afterward, none of the Concorde was flying. Air France agreed to temporarily ground its five remaining Concorde, and British Airways, which owns the other seven Concorde, grounded its two remaining flights for Tuesday night.

French television showed a chilling still-photograph of the plane flying low over the airport, flames already trailing from its midsection.

The hotel the plane crashed into was in flames, and sections had been reduced to rubble and twisted metal. Firefighters poured streams of water on the blackened wreckage, which had broken up into scattered, smoking chunks. The remains of the Concorde were barely recognizable as an airplane fuselage.

There was no immediate word on what might have caused the crash of the jet, which had been in service since 1980, had flown 12,000 hours and had just had a mechanical check-up July 21. In the more than 30 years that Concorde jets have flown, none had gone down.

The plane had been chartered by Peter Deilmann Shipping Co., a German tour group, and the passengers were on their way to New York to join a cruise ship.

The jetliner crashed at 4:44 p.m. in an area of farmland crisscrossed by highways and the small town of Gonesse, about nine miles northeast of Paris. It went down soon after takeoff from Charles de Gaulle airport.

Witnesses said the aircraft was not able to gain sufficient altitude before it crashed. Others said a huge cloud of black smoke went up in the air.

Samir Hossein, 15, a student in Gonesse, was playing tennis with friends when they saw the plane go by with an engine on fire.

"We saw it lose altitude. It chopped off those trees and headed to the ground," Hossein told The Associated Press. "The pilot tried to bank but the plane rolled over and smacked into the hotel nose first and turned over."

"We saw flames shoot up 40 meters (yards) and there was a huge boom," he said. "The pilot tried to yank it up, but it was too late."

Frederic Savery, 21, was driving along a highway on the way home when he saw the plane go down.

"I saw the plane, it passed 30 meters above us, the whole back end of the plane was on fire," Savery told the AP. "We saw it start to turn, but we didn't hear a noise when it crashed. All of a sudden, everything was black."

Air France President Jean-Cyril Spinetta, who said he had witnessed the crash but didn't specify from where, told reporters at the airport: "For those who were witnesses, of whom I was one, it seems that there was a fire in one or more of the engines on takeoff."

Clouds of dark smoke could be seen for miles around. Police blocked off all roads leading to the crash scene, backing up traffic on rural roads in the farm fields near the airport. Dozens of fire trucks and ambulances rushed to the scene.

Jospin and French Transport Minister Jean-Claude Gayssot visited the scene of the crash. "It's a terrible moment," Gayssot said.

In Washington, President Clinton said he wanted to extend the deepest condolences of the American people to the families of those who are lost. In Berlin, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder canceled his evening appointments to stay on top of developments.

An official at Peter Deilmann Shipping in the German city of Neustadt said most of the passengers — 97 adults and three young people under age 18 — came from various German states. They met in Paris to fly together for the cruise aboard the MS Deutschland, which is anchored in New York City.

The German Foreign Ministry has set up crisis management centers in Berlin and Paris. The ministry said more information would have to wait until the passengers' names were confirmed with passenger lists.

On Monday, British Airways said it had found cracks in the wings of some of its supersonic Concorde aircraft, but said there was no danger to passengers. After the crash Tuesday, the British airline canceled its two Tuesday night Concorde flights between London and New York.

"We have complete confidence in our Concorde aircraft and our engineering," the airline said in a press release. "Nevertheless, in these circumstances — and while information is still coming in — we have taken the unprecedented step of canceling tonight's flights."

French Transport Minister Jean-Claude Gayssot asked France's civil aviation authority to suspend all of Wednesday's scheduled Air France Concorde flights. Spinetta, the airline president, later said no Concorde would fly Wednesday and the day would be used to check the rest of the company's fleet of Concorde.

In a statement released in Paris, Gayssot said the step, which was taken in agreement with Air France, was necessary to allow time for a preliminary investigation.

The Concorde, which crosses the Atlantic at 1,350 mph, has been considered among the world's safest planes. Its only big scare came in 1979, when a bad landing blew out a plane's tires. The incident led to a design modification.

On Jan. 30, a Concorde aircraft made an emergency landing at London's Heathrow Airport — the second such landing within a 24-hour period by one of the supersonic jets. A cockpit alarm had sounded, warning of a fire in the rear cargo hold, but engineers found no problem.

The previous day, one of four engines had shut down on a Concorde as it approached Heathrow.

MICHAEL YOUNG/COLLEGIAN

K-State brings family closer together

By NANCY FOSTER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mike Finnegan walked into class. He sat down and waited for his name to be called. It was never called. He got up, packed his bag and left the classroom. Shortly after, the professor followed.

He asked, "Excuse me, son. Why are you leaving?"

"You never called my name during roll call."

"What is your name?"

"John Smith."

The professor walked back into his room, grabbed his list and looked for John Smith.

"Oh, here it is," he said. "I must have just skipped over it. Come on back in and sit down."

This could happen in any classroom, but this classroom happened to be the one of Mike's father, Michael Finnegan, and not finding his name on the list was all part of a joke they played to hide their father-son identities.

"It is something that dad and I still laugh about today," Mike Finnegan, 2000 graduate and K-State admissions representative, said. "It was fun. A lot of fun."

Mike said having his father as a professor, his mother as a staff assistant and his sister as a second-year veterinary medicine student all at K-State is a fun experience.

"It's anything that any student, or anyone now working for K-State, can ask for," he said. "I've got my whole family here, and that's not anything just anybody can say."

Mike's sister, Jennifer, who completed her undergraduate studies at the University of Kansas, attended a summer class of her father's and said they also tried to hide their identities until one day when she slipped in class.

"I was sitting behind the projector, and I couldn't see," she said. "I slipped and said, 'Dad, can you move the projector?'"

Jennifer said being in her father's class allowed her to see a different side of his personality.

"It was neat seeing that side of him," she said. "We had seen him as fun and a little strict, but in the classroom he's free-spirited and energetic. It was really a great experience taking his class."

She said it came in handy that her father is a professor of anthropology when her first test dealt with the bones of a dog.

"I was the only one with a complete dog skeleton at my house, so I'd make up quizzes and stuff for my lab partners," Jennifer said. "They were kind of jealous since I had all this access to bones."

Mike said he received an 89 percent in his father's class, but because it was his father, he didn't attempt to get the grade raised.

"I would've felt more comfortable going up to a teacher I didn't know as personally to ask what I could do to get an 'A,' but I just walked away," he said.

Michael said having his children in his classes wasn't too different than anyone else being in his classes.

"You hope that they do well. You hope all your students do well, but when your kids are in your class, you really hope they

Camp David talks conclude without pact

By BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THURMONT, Md. — The Middle East peace talks at Camp David collapsed Tuesday in a deadlock over the future of Jerusalem. Conceding failure, President Clinton said the Israelis and Palestinians couldn't get there.

Clinton returned to the White House to say that the gaps between Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat had not been bridged, but forecast that they will be because he thinks the alternative is unthinkable.

"I think they both remain committed to peace," he said. "I think they will both find a way to get there if they don't let time run away from them."

The Israeli and Palestinian delegations said in a statement they intended "to continue their efforts to conclude an agreement on all permanent status issues as soon as possible."

They also said they understood the importance of avoiding unilateral actions.

Barak and Arafat spent two weeks at Camp David with Clinton as the sponsor and sometimes personal mediator in the peace talks.

It had become clear earlier in the day that no serious headway was in sight despite an offer by Barak to Arafat to recognize some sort of Palestinian sovereignty in east Jerusalem.

Clinton credited both sides with seeking a compromise on the city's future, but appeared to suggest Barak took bolder steps.

"The Palestinians changed their position, they moved forward," he said, lifting the veil of secrecy he had imposed on the details of the negotiations. "The Israelis moved more."

At another point, the president said Barak showed courage and vision and Arafat made clear he remains committed to peace.

Palestinian sources said the breaking point was Israel's refusal to recognize Palestinian sovereignty over Jerusalem's walled Old City, offering only access to the Al Aqsa mosque, the third-holiest site in Islam. Arafat was infuriated, the sources said.

Hassan Abdel Rahman, the PLO's representative in Washington, D.C., said Israel's offer of limited sovereignty was unacceptable and a nonstarter. He said the Palestinians had insisted on sovereignty over all of the Old City.

"Regarding the issue of Jerusalem, as with other issues, the Palestinians did not change their positions during the discussions, so there was no chance of arriving at an agreement," said Gadi Baltiansky, a spokesman for Barak.

At 3 a.m. Tuesday, Arafat sent a letter to Clinton, saying he saw no point in continuing because the Israeli position on Jerusalem could never lead to an agreement, Palestinian sources said.

"If you ask me did they make enough progress to get this done, 'yes,'" Clinton said. "But they've got to go home and check, they've got to feel around."

"I feel that we have the elements here to keep this process going. ... I think it can happen," Clinton said.

But the president said he was not trying to put a gloss on the outcome.

Clinton said he believed there could be Israeli-Palestinian agreement before the end of his term, noting that the two sides had earlier set a Sept. 13 deadline for an agreement.

The president said, as had been disclosed before, that the status of Jerusalem was the more intractable issue. But even on that, he said, there was not a great deal of disagreement on the practical, operational questions of the way people there would live under some future accord.

Response to the breakdown was quick.

"This failure is another indication that the only choice we have is resistance," said Hamas leader Sheik Ahmed Yassin. "Only by force are we able to retain our rights. ... We are ready to become martyrs, and we say one short sentence: They will pay a high price if they think to attack us and reoccupy the land."

The breakdown came despite redoubled efforts by Clinton, who returned to Camp David Sunday night after a four-day trip to Japan.

Gas leak probable cause of explosion at apartments Tuesday afternoon

■ All 21 residents accounted for; only slight injuries reported. Investigations into explosion by RCPD to continue.

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan apartment complex went up in flames Tuesday afternoon after an explosion most likely caused by a natural gas leak, officials said.

The multi-unit apartment at 500 Humboldt St. was engulfed in flames when five fire units arrived at the scene at about 2:30 p.m. The entire front portion of the building had collapsed from the fire, according to a release from the Riley County Police Department.

The exact cause of the fire has not been determined, but City Manager Ron Fehr said officials were fairly confident it was caused by a gas leak.

"There was a call to a gas company from someone who smelled gas," he said. "The gas company did the standard procedure."

Although Fehr was not sure when the call was placed, he said it was sometime earlier in the day and the gas company did its job correctly.

Some residents began evacuating the building after the gas smell was detected, but some were in the building or in surrounding buildings when the explosion occurred.

Resident Jeremy Alldre said he was inside his apartment when he heard the explosion.

"Some plaster fell from the ceiling, and I heard a boom," he said. "I waited a while and then looked.

There was smoke everywhere outside."

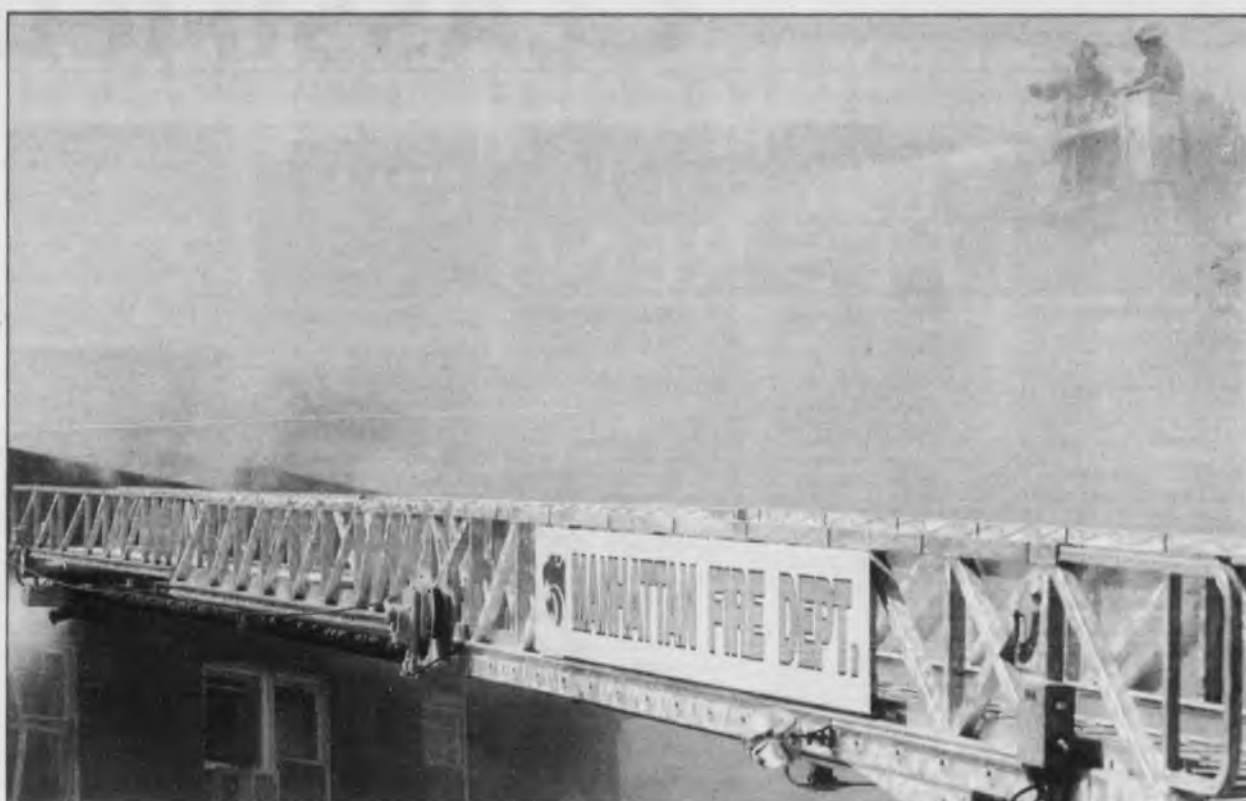

Doris Shorter said the explosion shook her out of her bed in her apartment in the neighboring complex.

"I was in my bed sleeping right next door," she said. "I heard a big explosion that jumped my bed up."

Shorter said she will never forget the scene that followed that explosion.

"Bricks were falling down hitting cars, people were coming out and looking around," she said. "Then I saw flames go up. I was in shock. It just shocked me."

There are no known fatalities at this time, and only slight injuries have been reported. All 21 complex residents were accounted for by around 7 p.m. Tuesday, Fehr said.

TOP: Manhattan firefighters work from atop a crane to put out the fire. BOTTOM: Spectators gather on all sides of the apartment fire on Humboldt Street on Tuesday afternoon to watch the blaze. The fire was believed to be started by a gas leak.

GOP critic faults census-taking methods

By SANDRA MARTINEZ
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — The Census Bureau should conduct new head counts in 15 areas around the country because of questionable behavior, a key Republican critic asserted Tuesday.

Rep. Dan Miller of Florida, who heads the House Government Reform Committee's Census panel, said there was a sudden surge in the completion of census forms in areas where resistance was initially encountered.

"I had serious doubts before the 2000 census even began that the bureau did not allow enough time for non-response follow-up efforts, officially scheduled to last only 10 weeks," Miller said at a news conference on Capitol Hill.

He said too many of the completed forms came from areas that have high rates of vacancies or deleted addresses in a number of communities that have been underrepresented in previous census counts.

The information, he said, was obtained by members of the census subcommittee staff in consultation with the congressional members of a Census Monitoring Board and two former senior Census Bureau officials, whom Miller did not identify.

The congressman said the staff members identified more than a dozen census offices in which data suggests fraud or irregular procedures.

Miller said that was disappointing in view of the roughly $6.5 billion the government has invested in the national head count.

The panel named these areas as questionable: Florence, Ala.; west Atlanta; Chicago's far south and near north areas, Marion County, Ind.; Las Vegas, Rapid City, S.D.; East Los Angeles, Commerce and Santa Ana, Calif.; Newark, the northwest section of the Queens borough of New York City; northeast New York City, Newcastle, Pa., north Philadelphia and Hialeah, Fla.

Census officials had acknowledged previously that they are reviewing some 150,000 households because questions have been raised about certain enumerating practices. But on Tuesday, they accused Miller of overstating the problem.

"We have told the subcommittee not to misrepresent the data because they are not easily interpretable to the public," Census Director Kenneth Prewitt said in a conference call with reporters. "But obviously they have not done so."

Rep. Carolyn Maloney, D-N.Y., in whose district one of the questioned Census offices operates, said she takes such allegations seriously.

"While I am concerned about these allegations, I am also concerned with the way they have been made," she said in a statement.

"To allege that procedures have been violated is one thing," the congresswoman said. "To make allegations of fraud is quite another, and after reviewing the documents provided carefully, I have seen no evidence of widespread fraud."

Suspicious about the 15 locations are based on problems the Bureau has had in South Florida and Chicago.

Despite the problems they have encountered, the bureau still believes the count overall has been efficient and thorough.

The Census Bureau had ordered a recount of thousands of city households in Chicago because some workers might have cut corners to boost the number of completed questionnaires.

We have some doubt about the quality of the count, bureau spokesman Steve Jost said in confirming the recount earlier this month.

do well, so you won't feel bad about it."

He did say that he caught both of his kids sleeping through his class, and that he called both of them on it.

Barbara, Mike's mother, said when Mike first decided to go to K-State, she wasn't nervous because they would be at the same place, but because of another reason.

"I was nervous only from the standpoint that we wanted him to get involved and meet new people, not just stay with the Manhattan High School crowd. We told both of them if they stayed in town, we wanted them to live in the residence halls or the greek system, but we encouraged them to not stay at home," she said. "He joined a fraternity and became a cheerleader. So, he really got involved in college life."

One of the advantages in having both of her children at K-State is that she gets to see them frequently, Barbara said.

"I guess what I like and what is so different from when they were in high school, is here they are both off in their own apartments, doing their own thing, but at the same time, they'll drop in for dinner or to do laundry, so we get to see them periodically. Just enough time to catch up, and that's kind of nice," she said.

"I run into Mike and Jennifer in the Union usually at lunch, and if they're willing to sit and talk to me, then I'll buy them lunch. That's the trade-off," she said.

Michael said he doesn't see his wife that often during work, but that it does have its advantages.

"It is neat having a wife here," he said. "Every once in a while I'll forget a Thermos or something. I get here around 7 a.m., and she comes later. If I forget my coffee or something, I'll call her and have her bring it to me."

Being able to give his children advice on what classes to take, and the fact they can just come in and talk, is a neat experience, he said.

"The best thing I like about my dad being here at K-State is just joking around," Mike said.

Receiving his e-mails, telephone calls and having been in his class have given them many chances to joke around.

Mike said even though he's no longer a student, he plans to have just as much fun being a part of the K-State faculty with them.

"It's going to be even more fun this year cause I'll have the same lunch break as Mom, so hopefully I'll get to eat with her more often and get some more free lunches."

Spread of Colorado wildfire slows

By P. SOLOMON BANDA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK, Colo. — A wind shift and thinner vegetation helped slow a wildfire that has carved an eerie landscape of burnt tree trunks and blackened ground across one-third of the nation's largest archaeological preserve.

The Mesa Verde National Park fire stalled Tuesday at an area damaged by blazes in 1972 and 1996, where shrubs were shorter and spaced farther apart, said Tim Oliverious, a U.S. Park Service fire management officer.

Firefighters lit a fire in a strip of thick vegetation between the two old fire sites, hoping to prevent the 22,000-acre blaze from spreading, Oliverious said.

Scattered puffs of smoke could be seen across the park early in the day instead of a giant plume that had dominated the southwestern Colorado sky for days.

Officials were optimistic they could make progress against the blaze if late-afternoon weather cooperated.

About 700 firefighters worked in 90-plus degree weather to build a line around the blaze. It was about 15 percent contained at midday, officials said.

The fire poses special challenges for firefighters and archaeologists, who are working side by side to protect mounds of rocks and rubble — artifacts from ancestral Pueblo Indians, who thrived amid the rugged mesas and canyons between 600 A.D. and 1300 A.D.

About 17 archaeologists, all certified firefighters, walk just ahead of the firefighters, tacking red-and-white tape on the historic sites.

"Sometimes you don't even know it's there until they point it out to us," said firefighter Wayne Kills Enemy, 32, of Rosebud, S.D.

"I saw a foundation of a dwelling, a two- to three-room dwelling, that at first just looked like a pile of rocks. But then I saw the outline of the rooms."

Lightning sparked the blaze in the park Thursday, forcing the evacuation of visitors and employees.

It moved toward the well-known sites, including the Cliff Palace, earlier this week.

Florida standoff ends with death of hostage; investigation begins

By VICKIE CHACHERE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — A police sniper fired the shot that killed a woman being held hostage by a murder suspect during a three-day standoff, authorities said Tuesday.

The sniper was aiming for hostage-taker Jamie Dean Petron when Andrea Hall, 40, was hit, said Orlando Police Chief Jerry Demings.

Demings would not discuss details of the shooting, which the Florida Department of Law Enforcement is investigating.

The Orlando police officer who fired the shot, Christopher J. Savard, 34, an 8-year veteran who had been a certified sniper for more than two years, was placed on paid administrative leave pending the investigation. Demings said the department expressed its condolences to Hall's family.

lences to Hall's family.

Petron told police negotiators on Sunday afternoon that they shot someone when the sniper fired into the home, but authorities said he refused to let them into the house or give up the injured hostage.

Demings said Petron also threatened to hurt the other hostages, children ranging in ages from about 8 months to 16 years old, if authorities tried to enter the home.

Petron took Hall and four members of her family hostage on Saturday.

He was suspected of killing a Broward County convenience store clerk and shooting an Orange County deputy in the leg.

Petron committed suicide Monday afternoon, 51 hours after rushing into the family's home.

The four other hostages, which included Hall's 8-year-old son and infant daughter, were not injured.

New engraving, framing store to open Aug. 7

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Doug and Deborah Minner will combine their occupations into one store when Urban Designs opens Aug. 7 in Aggieville.

Doug Minner is in charge of the engraving and awards department at Ballard's Sporting Goods. Deborah Minner was the gallery manager at Strecker-Nelson Gallery for three years before she quit in June. The couple will bring Ballard's engraving and awards services together with Strecker-Nelson's conservation framing and original art displays. Urban Designs will occupy the building in the 1200 block of Moro Street where Aggie Bike Station was previously.

Doug Minner said he plans on keeping his same clientele, but at a new location.

"I really expect my bigger customers to follow me, and I'll really rely on them," Doug Minner said. "If people go to Ballard's, they will just send them down my way."

Deborah Minner said the Aggieville store will draw more customers for her part of the business. She said Strecker-Nelson's location was a disadvantage because there's just a door seen from the outside, not a storefront window.

"At the new store, people will walk by and see it," Deborah Minner said.

"It should bring in more people that are interested in art."

She said the front of the store will look like a small art gallery of local and regional artists' work for sale. There will also be an area where orders will be taken for conservation framing, engraving and awards.

The featured artist will have work displayed for six weeks at a time. Laura Nothorn, of Lincoln, Neb., will be the first artist showcased. She paints in oils on canvas and makes block prints.

"She does a lot of vividly colored still lifes," Minner said.

Deborah Minner said she plans to market conservation framing education programs. Conservation framing is a standard framing that preserves art work for museums.

She said she plans to conduct conservation framing workshops and exhibits each semester at the store.

"I hope to get people involved in art that haven't been exposed to it before," Deborah Minner said. "This will teach things that haven't been taught at K-State."

Urban Designs will have its grand opening reception from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. Aug. 4.

There will be a ribbon-cutting ceremony with the Chamber of Commerce, and the first featured artist, Nothorn, will be present. The reception will be open to the public.

Indian tribe wants to bring casino to Douglas County

LAWRENCE — An Oklahoma Indian tribe with a Kansas history wants to build a casino, hotel, convention center and museum near the Lawrence Municipal Airport.

The Delaware Tribe of American Indians, based in Bartlesville, Okla., is negotiating to buy about 80 acres of farmland near the airport for the project. Chief Dee Ketchum said Tuesday.

The entertainment complex would employ as many as 1,800 people and have room for 4,000 guests, Ketchum said. Profits would be channeled into education programs for the tribe's 10,500 members, including 400 families in Kansas.

State-confiscated firearms to go back on sale this Saturday

TOPEKA — The state Department of Revenue plans to resume selling confiscated firearms, even though Gov. Bill Graves opposes the practice.

The department has scheduled a gun sale for Saturday, though it declined to say where and when that sale would be. It plans to sell about 400 firearms, 40 percent of them handguns.

Graves said in December that the state shouldn't be selling guns it confiscates in drug raids or prosecutions of drug offenders. He later proposed legislation to prevent the practice.

However, legislators rejected his proposal. Revenue Secretary Karla Pierce said the sale is required by a state law that imposes a tax on illegal drugs.

U.S. farmers might be paid to destroy part of sugar crop

WASHINGTON D.C. — With the nation awash in sugar, the government is preparing to give some of the surplus to farmers who pledge to destroy some of this fall's crop.

Although no final decision has been made on the sugar giveaway, Agriculture Department officials said Wednesday that it was the most feasible way to prop up domestic sugar prices at the least cost to taxpayers.

Prisoners, families seek out restoration of contact visits

SAN QUENTIN, Calif. — Until this spring, convicts on California's death row could occasionally touch and hug family members and friends, and laugh and eat with them.

But after a fight broke out between rival gang members in the visiting room, prison officials banned the so-called contact visits.

Now inmates and their supporters are urging prison officials in California and several other states to reconsider such policies, saying it is cruel to strip condemned prisoners of their only physical contact with the outside world.

Lebanon declares thousands missing from civil war dead

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Ending a seven-month investigation into the fate of thousands of Lebanese who disappeared during their country's 15-year civil war, a government commission on Wednesday asked relatives to accept the painful reality that their loved ones are probably dead.

In a condensed version of its findings, the commission, which investigated the fate of an estimated 17,000 Lebanese who went missing during the 1975-1990 war, called on families to begin the paperwork to obtain death certificates.

Ultimate Fakebook celebrates new CD

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local bands Ruskabank and Ultimate Fakebook will be performing at 9 tonight at the Silverado Saloon in Aggieville. This concert is the compact disc release party for newly signed Ultimate Fakebook.

The band is making its rounds not only through Kansas, but through Louisiana, New York and Florida sponsoring their newly released album, "This Will Be Laughing Week."

Ultimate Fakebook signed on to a subsidiary of the national record label Sony in December, and produced their latest album under that label.

Greg Gilman, owner of Silverado's, said they expect a good turnout and that several special things will be going on.

"I think they're giving away some CD's, and they'll be signing some of them," Gilman said. "And they've got some reps from Sony coming in."

Doors at Silverado's open at 7 p.m. and a $5 cover charge will apply.

Ruskabank also will be one of the last two bands to perform for the summer's Arts in the Park 2000 series Aug. 4. The band, who has performed with such bands as Limp Bizkit, The Urge and Exit 159, will begin playing at 8 p.m.

25th Kaw Valley Rodeo barrels into Manhattan tonight

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 300 barrel racers, cowboys and cowgirls from around the United States will ride into Manhattan tonight, Friday and Saturday for the 25th annual Kaw Valley Rodeo.

The rodeo will kick off at 8 tonight at the Wells Arena in CiCo Park. Seven events will occur each night: bull riding, saddle bronc, steer wrestling, barrel racing, bareback riding, calf roping and team roping, along with nightly performances by square dancers, horseback riders and clowns.

Tonight, Kids Night, is free admission for children who bring a food donation to participating Manhattan Main Street Merchants. The food will be donated to the Flinthills Breadbasket.

Char Henton, secretary of the Kaw Valley Rodeo Association, said the first 500 children to bring their ticket showing they donated food also will receive a free cowboy hat.

Henton said the rodeo is part of the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association, and that it is taken very seriously by the men and women who compete in it.

"Someone in the office once said that it's like the NFL of rodeo," she said. "These are professional athletes. This is their life. This is their career."

She said because of Manhattan's location, they are able to bring in many world champions.

"Basically, when you're a cowboy, you get a list of rodeos, and geographically where you are, you attend whatever ones you can. Our rodeo is geographically good because a lot of cowboys are on their way to Wyoming for Cheyenne Frontier Days," Henton said.

Rodeos are different than other professional sports, she said, because they don't get paid unless they win.

"You pay to ride, and if you don't win, you don't get a paycheck," Henton said. "So, it's a serious business for them."

The professional rodeo begins each night at 8. On Friday night, a special rodeo will take place at 7, with events for children with special needs.

Henton said they have many events planned, and they expect a good turnout.

"We have a beautiful facility and wonderful crowds," she said. "I think people really do enjoy coming to Manhattan because we really enjoy seeing them, so we welcome the community to come see them."

Each night, an activity for children 12 years and younger has been planned. Mutton Bustin', available to the first 10 children who register, is an event in which children ride sheep. Three children will be chosen by a clown each night to participate in the Greased Pig Grab, in which a pig is turned loose in the arena.

Also scheduled is the Calf Scramble. Each night, a different age bracket will participate in the event, attempting to take a ribbon off of a calf. Children ages 7 to 8 will be able to participate tonight, ages 9 to 10 Friday and ages 11 to 12 on Saturday.

"There's a real human interest and human aspect to the rodeo," Henton said. "It really is a family."

Explosion on Humboldt

Ventilation problem cause of fire

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fire that destroyed the 500 Humboldt apartment complex Tuesday has been traced to a ventilation problem in one of the apartments, officials said.

One of the tenants, David Lawson, Apt. 15, was working on a gas stove when the gas began to fill the room, said Rick Berry, chief battalion officer of the Manhattan Fire Department.

Lawson's window air conditioner was turned on and ignited the gas, causing an explosion and the subsequent fire.

"It's hard to say what could have been done differently to prevent this," Berry said. "Maybe he wasn't qualified to be working with these tools. Maybe one of the valves should have been turned off. All we can say is the room wasn't properly ventilated."

The fire department said there will be no criminal investigation into the fire, and Lawson is being treated no differently than the other residents.

Damages totaled $652,200, Berry said.

There was $179,000 of content damages, $455,000 of structural damage and $18,200 to three vehicles hit by falling debris, Berry said.

The structure has been declared unlivable. Crews are removing asbestos from the complex right now, Berry said, and demolition will begin within the next few days.

Fire victims left with little Church, Red Cross help accommodate residents.

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Natalie Laverne is left only with her memories.

When fire tore threw her apartment building at 500 Humboldt St., Tuesday, all firefighters could salvage from the destroyed apartment were a few old photographs.

"They pulled some pictures out, but that's it," she said. "You just take everything for granted until it's all gone."

Laverne, along with 20 other residents, is now left trying to piece her life back together. Starting over isn't an easy feat to accomplish, though, especially for Laverne, who is pregnant and supporting herself.

"I've got a baby on the way," she said. "It makes things a little harder for me."

Laverne and the other residents aren't completely on their own, however. First Christian Church, which owns the apartment complex, and the American Red Cross are working with displaced residents to find permanent or semi-permanent homes, and providing them with food and clothing.

Vi Vifogerson, vice chair of the church board, said First Christian is working arduously to help the people who lost nearly everything.

"We're doing everything we can to accommodate these residents," she said.

The church put people up in hotels who didn't have anywhere else to go Tuesday night. They will continue to temporarily house and feed people for the next couple of nights, Vifogerson said, but empty beds are hard to find.

"It's really difficult," she said. "A lot of the motels in Manhattan are full."

"If anyone has a spare bedroom, they can give the church a call," Vifogerson said. "That would be great."

Some of the apartment residents, such as Laverne, are lucky enough to have friends they can stay with for a few days, but most of the residents are still concerned with finding permanent homes.

Rick Bowles, Red Cross volunteer, said they are assisting people with their searches for homes, but it can be a long process.

"They're looking for them," he said. "It's going to take a while. I think they're still in a state of shock."

The residents' shock has been eased by the support of the Manhattan community, Bowles said.

"The community has been extremely supportive," he said. "In general the morale of the people is good. They seem to be holding up very well, considering everything."

Volunteers are on-site at First Christian Church, which is right across from the destroyed apartment complex. Cash donations can be made at the Red Cross, and those interested can volunteer their time.

Although most residents are concerned with replacing their possessions now, it is important for everyone to be thankful for what they still have, Bowles said.

"Some people lost everything, and some people lost less than everything," he said. "Amazingly though, no one was killed. You can replace things. You can't replace people."

Shops prep for back to school

By NANCY HULL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Area businesses are packing up their summer items and bringing out necessities for students' back-to-school needs.

Kevin Metcalf, Kmart store manager, said college students will begin their shopping on Tuesday when they move back into apartments.

"Now, all the feature displays are anything summer-related, like pools and squirt guns," Metcalf said. "Those will change to more domestic items."

Pillows, blankets, refrigerators and microwaves are items he said will take over the displays.

"Students buy everything from ironing boards to cleaning supplies," Metcalf said. "They get everything needed to start a new apartment."

He said students living in the residence halls have some different needs than those living in apartments.

"For the dorms, they buy sheets and blankets," Metcalf said. "At apartments they generally bring those things with them."

He said residents usually buy their necessities on the day the residence halls open or the day before.

Veronica Mangiaracino, assistant manager at Wal-Mart, said beanbags are a common purchase among students.

"It's not as popular as in the past, but it's still popular," she said.

She said she expects to sell a lot of desks, bookcases and entertainment centers within the next few weeks.

To avoid running out of popular items, Mangiaracino said the store keeps records from past years.

"We try to do a little bit better every year."

Mangiaracino said they're hiring more staff to assist students' needs, and she said the number of workers will vary. Metcalf said there will be a 10- to 15-percent increase in staff at Kmart for the upcoming busy time.

Aside from basic living needs, students will soon buy textbooks and school supplies.

Carrie Mitchell, assistant manager at the K-State Union Bookstore, said she expects students to start coming to the bookstore on Aug. 7.

"The 7th is the first day to utilize the Education Charge Account Program, so they come in to get the used textbooks," Mitchell said.

She said the K-State programmer, a student planner that includes dates of K-State events, is an item almost all students purchase.

"We'll go through hundreds every day, and we already went through several thousand at orientation."

Since the end of orientation in June, the bookstore has been planning for the August rush.

It has been buying supplies and making backup orders. There will be two or three backup orders arriving over the next month to ensure the store doesn't run out popular items.

"We've been taking care of the textbooks that we receive every day, and there's always more school supplies coming in," Mitchell said.

Pens, pencils and spiral-bound notebooks are items she said will go quickly.

The bookstore is in the process of hiring about 50 more students to work during the back-to-school rush.

There are usually six cash registers in the store, but there will be 14 registers at the beginning of August.

Mitchell said she expects the store to remain busy throughout the month of August.

"It usually slows down the second week of September," Mitchell said. "Then we'll get back to normal."

Engine problems likely cause of Air France Concorde crash

By ANGELA DOLAND
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GONESSE, France — An engine that began spewing a huge trail of fire as the doomed Air France Concorde took off had been repaired at the captain's insistence just before the flight began, officials said Wednesday.

As the plane flew low over the airport, an air traffic controller saw the flames shooting from the newly repaired engine and quickly alerted Capt. Christian Marty, but the pilot's frantic, last-ditch attempts at an emergency landing were in vain. Moments later, the supersonic jet crashed in a huge fireball, killing 109 people on board and four on the ground.

On Wednesday, a day after the Concorde plummeted into a hotel just outside Paris, investigators focused on the repaired engine — engine No. 2, located on the plane's left side — as the likely source of the disaster.

As details of Flight AF4590's last moments were released, authorities ordered all Air France Concorde flights indefinitely grounded and French forensic experts examined charred bodies to determine their identities. Relatives of the victims began arriving in Paris.

"Today Germany is shaken," Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder said at a service for the victims at a chapel in Hanover, Germany, on the grounds of the World's Fair. Pope John Paul II sent condolences.

French President Jacques Chirac said everything would be done to determine the causes of the accident.

Prosecutor Elisabeth Senot, who is in charge of the crash investigation, said the control tower alerted Marty that the back of the plane was on fire 56 seconds after takeoff. The pilot replied that he had engine trouble, at which point the flames were rapidly growing, France 2 television quoted Senot as saying.

Marty said he was trying to reach Le Bourget, a nearby airport. "It is during this looping maneuver that the aircraft crashed on the hotel in Gonesse," France 2 quoted Senot as saying.

Senot identified the engine that burst into flames as engine 2.

In a statement, Air France said the engine reverse thruster of engine 2 of the doomed plane was inoperative on its return from New York July 24. Such thrusters are used to slow the plane upon landing.

Although the required piece was not available, the plane was cleared for departure because it still met manufacturer's safety requirements, Air France said. The captain, however, ordered the part replaced before he would take off, the statement said.

Workers made the repair using a part from a backup Concorde, the airline said. It did not say whether the last-minute repair could have been related to the catastrophe.

Earlier Wednesday, French Transport Minister Jean-Claude Gayssot ordered the indefinite suspension of all Air France Concorde flights. He said he wanted more checks, with an emphasis on the recovered black boxes — the flight recorders and cockpit voice recorder.

"When we know a sufficient amount about them, and when we're in touch with our British colleagues, we will be able to consider the decision to resume," he said. However, he said the future of the Concorde was "not in question."

The Ministry of Transportation said the two recorders were damaged but had been found.

Air France already had grounded all Concorde flights Wednesday. British Airways canceled its two Tuesday night flights, but resumed Concorde service Wednesday between New York and London after completing safety checks.

French media speculated on whether this marked the end of the swooping "white bird," a source of French pride. The daily Le Figaro wrote, "The Concorde, without a doubt, died yesterday."
